

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

NYPL RESEARCH LIBRARIES

3 3433 02266073 6

ΠΕΡΦΡΑΣΤΗΣ
ΜΕΛΑΝΤΑ
ΕΡΕΣΙΟΣ

ΘΕΟΦΡΑΣΤΟΥ ΧΑΡΑΚΤΗΡΕΣ

THE

CHARACTERS OF THEOPHRASTUS

100 YAEZ

1307 C

Cambridge:

PRINTED BY C. J. CLAY, M.A.
AT THE UNIVERSITY PRESS.

ΘΕΟΦΡΑΣΤΟΥ ΧΑΡΑΚΤΗΡΕΣ

THE
CHARACTERS OF THEOPHRASTUS

AN ENGLISH TRANSLATION FROM A REVISED TEXT

WITH INTRODUCTION AND NOTES

Richard
BY
R. C. JEBB, M.A.

FELLOW AND ASSISTANT-TUTOR OF TRINITY COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE, AND PUBLIC ORATOR OF THE UNIVERSITY.

London and Cambridge:
MACMILLAN AND CO.

1870.

[All Rights reserved.]

ADVERT
21 1997
ADVERT 1372

P R E F A C E.

AT a time when the desire to see ancient life more vividly on every side from which it can illustrate our own is perhaps the strongest with which the classics are widely read, it seems possible that the Characters of Theophrastus may have some general interest. To Englishmen who do not read Greek they are probably best known through the French translation of La Bruyère. In an edition of the Characters published in 1852 the Rev. J. G. Sheppard mentions an English translation by Mr F. Howell (1824), and another by Mr H. Galley, of which he does not give the date. But he does not speak of either with approbation; and I have not been able to learn that there is any other.

The first object of my book is to make these lively pictures of old Greek manners better known to English readers. But some critical labour has been given to it, and I venture to hope that in certain points of view it may have interest for scholars.

A translator of the Characters is forced to become also an editor. The text is corrupt, and has long been a field for the ingenuity of critics. It is thickly studded with passages on which hardly two commentators agree; and there is no edition with which I am acquainted in which the editor has not adopted several of his own conjectures. A student of the book who is capable of forming a judgment upon its difficulties is thus driven to make a text for himself. 'Where doctors differ so often and so utterly, it is absolutely necessary that he should be 'nullius addictus iurare in verba.' He must, in the disputed passages, first inquire what the mss. have, and whether sense can be made of it. If he concludes that it is nonsense, he has the conjectures of previous critics to choose from. If no one of these appears satisfactory, or if he has thought of something which seems to him more probable than any of them, he is justified in adopting his own emendation. A critic ordinarily competent to weigh the opinions of other critics has in every case a right to give so much of weight to his own. In the case of the Characters this right is especially clear. Each chapter consists of a string of short sentences not necessarily connected in meaning. When, therefore, in any one of these the genuine reading has been lost, no sure clue for its recovery can be looked for from the context; for it is possible that the sentence, as written by the author, had no connexion with the sentences which precede and follow it. Every such passage must be treated as a separate riddle; and the limits within which the answer may lie are wide. Open competition in conjecture affords the best hope of the true answer being found. A paper by Dr O. Ribbeck in the Rheinisches Museum for January, 1870, entitled 'Critical Remarks on the Characters of Theophrastus,' illustrates the freedom with which German scholars are disposed to apply this principle.

In forming the text from which this translation has been made I have used the editions of (1) F. Ast, Leipzig, 1816: (2) J. G. Sheppard, London, 1852: (3) H. E. Foss, Leipzig, 1858: (4) E. Petersen, Leipzig, 1859: (5) J. L. Ussing, Hanover, 1868. The editions of Foss and Petersen give in full the readings of the three principal mss.,—viz. of Par. A. and B., from Herr Fr. Dübner's collation, and of the Vatican ms. from Mr Badham's; also the reading of several other mss. where they are important. The essential apparatus criticus is thus provided. The commentaries of Ast, Foss and Ussing give the conjectures of various other editors and commentators, and make the constant use of the older editions (as of Needham's) practically unnecessary for the purposes of textual criticism. A Critical Appendix at the end of the book contains the results of my work on the text as regards all important points. In a great number of cases it will be found that I have adhered more closely than previous editors to the mss. as reported by Foss and Petersen. In a few cases, where neither the mss. nor the critics solved a difficulty to my satisfaction, I have adopted conjectures of my own. The chief of these are:—

In Ch. VIII. συναυλήσοντας for συναύξοντας.

In Ch. XIV. λευρόν for λυπρόν.

In Ch. XVI. οὐδὲ καπήλων for οὐδ' ἅμα πολλῶν.

In Ch. XXI. Κορινθιακῶς for κρινοκόρακα.

In Ch. XXVIII. ἐστιώμενον for ἐστεμμένον.

In Ch. XXIX. ἰσχύος, οὐ κέρδους for ἰσχυροῦ κέρδους.

The grounds upon which these emendations rest are stated in the Appendix.

If the moderate use of conjecture is a privilege which few, perhaps, will challenge, the translator who presumes to expurgate must expect protests. In assuming the unpopular and much-suspected office of expurgator, I was sensible that I was imperilling the pretensions of this little book to a severely high tone of scholarship, and risking the censure of that large majority who prefer the integrity to the purity of a text. There are, however, in the Characters about a dozen passages or phrases which I was unwilling to translate, and which I have omitted both in the English and in the Greek. The curious can discover them by comparing this edition with any other in the chapters περὶ ἀγροικίας, ἀπονολας, βδελυρίας, περιεργίας, ἀναισθησίας, δυσχερείας, ἀηδίας, ὀψιμαθίας. At least three objections may evidently be made to such omissions. First, that a translator so fastidious would have done better to have left the Characters alone altogether. To this it may be replied that the coarseness in the delineations of Theophrastus is but a small element, accidental, not essential, and can in every case be separated from the portrait without injuring it as a whole. Secondly, it may be asked—‘Where is the line to be drawn? Why is this struck out and that left in?’ Here I have nothing to say but that I have used my best discretion. Thirdly, an objector may contend that, granting the advisability of omitting certain passages in the English translation, there was no sufficient reason for omitting them in the Greek text. It is enough to answer that, in this book, the Greek text is printed only as an adjunct to the translation; and that, therefore, passages omitted in the translation could not, with due regard to symmetry, be left in the text. So to leave them, it may be added, would have been nearly equivalent to printing them in capital letters.

The order in which the mss. arrange the Characters has been changed, in this Translation, for an order less embarrassing to the reader. The reasons for this change are stated in the Introduction, pp. 43 ff.

The illustrative notes have been made to consist, as much as possible, of short translated extracts from Greek or Roman writers. The choice of these extracts cost some time and trouble; but, while making them, I often thought of a passage in that delightful book, the Oxford Spectator—the account of the Oxford Commemoration given by an historian writing in 4000 A.D.:—‘On the last day of the Commemoration festival it appears that there was a procession to Nuneham, a pleasant spot some miles down the river: ‘the whole University goes to Nuneham,’ says the writer of a private letter.’ Anyone who attempts to write notes on the details of ancient life is pretty sure to make some statements of this kind. He can only take precautions to keep the number down as much as possible.

TRINITY COLLEGE,

April 4, 1870.

INTRODUCTION.

I.

PROBABLE ORIGIN OF THE BOOK.

THE book of Characters which tradition ascribes to Theophrastus, the pupil of Aristotle, contains thirty sketches from Athenian society in the age of Alexander the Great. If they do not go far into human nature, they touch things upon its surface with a good deal of humour and acuteness. As illustrations of manners, again, they have this merit, that they treat of commonplace people and of everyday life. But it is not as pictures of men or of manners that they seem most interesting.

Besides the language which a literature can preserve, every civilised people has another which necessarily dies with it, the language of society. The general sense of a word survives in books, and it is sometimes possible by a comparison of passages to discriminate shades of meaning ; but it is seldom or never possible to be sure that we have seized the precise notions which the word conveyed long ago to the men in whose mouths it was a part of living speech. A thousand associations which we cannot guess at, reaching back into the infancy of the people, becoming more complex with its growth, intertwining themselves with every part of its civil and social being, were blent together in every word through which this life found utterance, and dyed each with tints which are lost for ever when the glow from which they were caught is extinct. The words of a dead language are like panes of stained glass seen on a bleak morning. The genius of the design which they make up can be felt ; and, if the separate colours seem hard in the grey light, it is possible to imagine them deepened ; but no imagination can see them as they looked when the evening sunshine was streaming through the window. When the life of a nation is over, the forms of the language which it once warmed remain, and sympathy can still quicken them, perhaps, with a tinge of the old spirit ; but the very soul which gave its meaning to the shape can never be lit up again.

This loss is at once severest and least remediable in the case of those terms which every society invents or adapts to express familiar ethical facts from points of view peculiar to itself ; but which either do not come into books, or are not fully explained there. Even in a living language such terms are seldom so well understood by a foreigner that he can be sure of using them in exactly the right cases. For instance, the ironical application of ' shocking ' occasionally met with in French novels is not always what we should consider happy ; and few Englishmen would dare to say that they knew precisely what is meant by certain French and German terms of the same kind. This is one of the obvious reasons against interlarding one's mother-speech with words borrowed to express ideas pithily ; the words so borrowed are usually just those which a foreigner is most likely to use wrongly. They are saturated more deeply than any others with the mind of the people to whom they are peculiar. For the same reason, when it is possible to arrive at a tolerably clear notion of what they mean, no helps are so valuable towards understanding the ways in which a foreign people feels and thinks.

Now in the Characters of Theophrastus we have thirty such words explained and fully illustrated. The precise idea, for example, which an Athenian attached to 'Meanness' is put beyond a doubt by a list of the things which the Mean man will do. To make clearness doubly clear, qualities nearly akin to each other are in some cases described. Thus the province of Meanness has its border still better defined by juxtaposition to Avarice and to Penuriousness. We have, in fact, in this book, a fragment of the social language of Athens interpreted by a very full and explicit commentary. The value of such a fragment to the study of Greek history and literature is surely not slight. A series of men, vividly seen, with all the tricks of speech and manner which marked them in Athenian society, passes before us; and for once we know that we are viewing them from an absolutely Athenian standpoint, and can name every one of them as an Athenian would have named him. It would be a dull imagination which were not helped by this to understand better the drama played on a larger stage, and to feel the language which the actors spoke as if it were one of which the shades could still be caught from the tones and gestures of living men.

It is well known that the text of the Characters is corrupt, though there is scarcely a place where the general meaning cannot be seen; and that one manuscript, now in the Vatican library, is the sole authority for two of the chapters, as well as for certain additions to thirteen others. A short account of the manuscripts and of the principal editions will be found in another place<sup>1</sup>. Here it will be enough to say that there have been three epochs in the modern history of the book; the appearance of Casaubon's edition in 1598; the discovery of the two long-missing chapters in 1786; and the publication, in 1834-6, of three essays by Herr H. E. Foss, by which the disputed authenticity of these chapters and of the other additions in the Vatican MS. may be said to have been established.

<sup>1</sup> Critical Appendix.

The origin of a book so singular in style and with a history so peculiar has been the subject of various theories. It is proposed briefly to review the principal of these; to consider the chief arguments for and against them; and to separate, as far as possible, what is certain or probable from what remains mere matter of conjecture.

Two questions occur. Were the Characters written by Theophrastus? And, if so, did they originally form an independent work, or have they been extracted from some other book or books?

*Authorship of the Characters
—Burney's
view.*

Burney<sup>1</sup> believed that the Characters were composed by a writer who lived under the Roman Empire, and who derived them from the pictures of old Greek life in the dramatists of the Middle or New Comedy. The second part of this theory scarcely requires to be disproved. No incident, no trait of style in the book warrants the supposition that a writer whose aim was to describe manners turned from living men to portraits of the dead. It is only necessary to read the 'Letters' in which Alciphro, a rhetorician of the Empire, attempted to revive the Athens of Menander, in order to feel the difference between a clever cento and a sketch from life<sup>1</sup>. There remains the more general proposition,—that the Characters, if not a patchwork, are yet the production of an age later than that of Theophrastus. This opinion no longer finds many supporters; but it is due to some names whose authority it has had to state the grounds on which it appears improbable.

<sup>1</sup> The authority for Burney's opinion is a note by Dobree on Ar. Plut. 1021 (in his Porsoni notae in Aristophanem, Cambridge, 1820):—‘Docte et acute suspicabatur desideratissimus Burnei, tempore imperatorum Romanorum ex co-moediis esse consarcinatos (Characteras).’

<sup>1</sup> Alciphro probably lived in the latter part of the second century A.D. His imaginary Letters, in three books, are intended to illustrate the Athenian manners of an earlier time. One of them purports to be written by Menander, who was contemporary with Theophrastus. It is probable that the ludicrous adventures of parasites and rustics which they describe were taken in part from pieces of the Middle and New Comedy. If this be so, we have here sketches actually constructed as Burney supposed the Characters to have been—'ex comoediis consarcinatae.' The artificial and elaborate drollery of the Letters is in striking contrast with the simple humour of the Characters.

*Date of the Characters.
-External evidence.*

The earliest writer who ascribes the Characters to Theophrastus is Diogenes Laertius, early in the third century. Supposing him to have been deceived, further evidence to their higher antiquity can be found only in themselves. The internal evidence which they supply is of two kinds, general and particular.

Internal evidence—that of the language.

The general evidence is, in the first place, that of the language. As far as the state of the text allows us to judge, the book contains scarcely a word or a construction which would not be admissible in what is usually called 'classical' Greek prose<sup>1</sup>. Changes in the language and in literary style proceeded rapidly from the beginning of the third century B.C.; and even those later writers who, like Lucian, especially studied Atticism, use words and constructions which, as far as we can judge, an old Attic writer would not have used. As regards the ordinary style of the later prose-writers, there is no possibility of mistaking it for the 'classical': not only is the language different, but the old straightforward way of writing has given place to a general taste for antithesis and for what was thought melodious arrangement. The plain, short sentences of the Characters, the series of infinitives strung together on the οἷος at the head of each chapter, like papers of all sizes on a file, do not resemble such work as the disciples of the rhetorical schools loved to produce. The only case which has been alleged of a post-classical usage is δεισιδαιμονία in the sense of 'superstition.' The word, it is said, did not 'acquire' a bad sense till after the time of Theophrastus. As we have endeavoured to show in a note on c. XXVIII. it is inaccurate to speak of the word 'acquiring' a sense which potentially it must always have had. And that, as early as the time of Theophrastus, it was actually used in this as well as in its better sense, is sufficiently shown by the fact that Menander wrote a comedy with the title Δεισιδαίμων.

<sup>1</sup> If καὶ τὸ ἐπεὶ occurs in the character of the Flatterer, it should be remembered that the same construction is found in Plato's Symposium.

Another kind of general evidence may Evidence probably be derived from the nature of the of the manners.

social manners which the Characters describe. Here, indeed, we are on ground far less sure than that of language. But it is certain that we may recognise in these sketches that frank homeliness which marked old Athenian life, and which faded there, as elsewhere, when men began to take their tone from the new capital of the world. This homeliness is seen in frequent allusions to the details of a small household, to petty loans between neighbours, to minute economies in dress and the like<sup>1</sup>. The simple life thus opened, and the candour which opens it, remind us rather of Aristophanes than of any writer whose taste in manners and in literature had been formed under imperial Rome<sup>2</sup>.

Evidence of particular passages.

The particular evidence consists in passages which allude to Alexander the Great and to his immediate successors as to persons with whom the speakers were contemporary.

<sup>1</sup> See esp. cc. 14, 15, 23.

<sup>2</sup> The tone of social life in the small republics of ancient Greece is described, with the inspiration of a true feeling for Aristophanes, by Mr G. O. Trevelyan, in the paper 'A Holiday among some Old Friends,' lately reprinted from the Cornhill Magazine in the same volume with 'Ladies in Parliament.'

In c. XXIII. (VI. of this edition) the Boastful man brags of having served with Alexander; and afterwards states that Antipater has conferred upon him the privilege of exporting timber from Macedonia free of duty. This appears to refer to the four years during which Antipater, first as regent of the province of Macedonia, afterwards as supreme regent of the whole Macedonian empire, was master of Athens, 322—318 B.C. In c. VIII. (XX. in this ed.) the Newsmonger,—or, as he is styled, the Newsmaker,—pretends that he has just had news of a battle between Cassander and Polysperchon. These leaders were at war in the years 317—316 B.C.; and the particular time referred to is probably the early part of the year 316, after the war had been transferred from Greece to Macedonia, and when tidings were anxiously expected at Athens, which had declared in the previous autumn for Cassander.

Now a writer who wished to illustrate character by sketches of representative men might of course, if he pleased, throw them back into history. By so doing, however, he would not only give himself much needless trouble, but would lose nearly all the freshness and effect. An English character-writer of the present day, who wished to convey a distinct idea of how a braggart speaks and acts, would scarcely place him in the reign of Elizabeth, and make him boast of his adventures with Raleigh, or affect to have received private advices from the Low Countries. Or, if he chose to proceed in this way, he would at least take care that the allusions should be such as ordinary readers could easily recognise. On Burney's hypothesis, however, the author of the Characters neglected even this precaution. The allusion which he has placed in the mouth of his Newsmonger is to an obscure episode in the complicated quarrels of Alexander's successors. To an Athenian who lived just then the episode happened to be important, and in his mind it would fill a large space: but it is scarcely one which a literary man, writing long afterwards, would have brought into a popular sketch. The probability that the composer of the Characters was contemporary with the events of which they speak may be illustrated from the case of a similar book in our own literature. Let us suppose that, several centuries after the English language was dead, a critic with no external testimony before him, and who could not trust himself to decide surely between the literary styles and social manners of different periods, wished to ascertain from internal evidence when Hall's 'Characterismes of Vertues and Vices' were written. He would be struck, in the first place, by a passage in the sketch of the Busie-Bodie. 'What euerie man ventures in Guiana voyage and what they gained he knows to a haire. Whether Holland will haue peace hee knowes, and on what conditions; and with what successe is familiar to him ere it bee concluded.' Another passage to which he might look for help is in the sketch of the Vaine-glorious man. 'His talke is...what exploits he did at Cales or Nieuport.' If he then consulted histories, he would find that voyages to Guiana were most in fashion in England during the latter part of Raleigh's life, who made his first expedition thither in 1595, and his second in 1618. A truce for twelve years between the States-General and Spain was signed on the 9th

April, 1609. Calais was taken by the Spaniards April 17th, 1596<sup>1</sup>, and remained in their hands until Henry IV. regained it by a treaty with Philip signed at Vervins, May 2nd, 1598. In the interval he more than once asked Elizabeth to help him in a siege for the recovery of the town<sup>2</sup>. The battle of Nieuport, in which the army of the States-General, led by Maurice of Nassau, with the English allies under Sir Francis Vere, defeated the Spaniards under Albert of Austria, was fought July 2nd, 1600<sup>3</sup>. Here, then, are four distinct allusions to events comprised in a period of about twelve years. It would be a reasonable inference that these were events of the writer's own time; and that the 'Characterismes' were written either soon before or soon after the end of the war between Spain and Holland. If the inquirer could assume that the sketch of the Busie-bodie, who discusses the prospects of peace, was written while peace was really future, then he would have ascertained that part of the book at least was composed not later than the spring of 1609. If he hesitated to assume this, he would merely pronounce it probable that the book was written in or about the years 1600—1610. We know that, in fact, it was published in 1608.

<sup>1</sup> Motley, United Netherlands, III. 346, 470.

<sup>2</sup> Ib. III. 347, 432.

<sup>3</sup> Ib. IV. 27-47.

On evidence of the like kind, confirmed by the general evidence first noticed, it is probable that the Characters were written in or about the years 322—300 B.C. If the inference which would have been safe in respect to Hall's 'Busie-Bodie' is safe in respect to the Greek sketch of the 'Newsmaker,' then that chapter, at least, was written early in the year 316 B.C.; but this is uncertain and unimportant.

The life of Theophrastus, though its precise limits are doubtful, falls in the period <sup>Date of Theophrastus.</sup> 373—284 B.C.<sup>1</sup> The Characters are expressly ascribed to him by Diogenes in the third century, and were known as his to the later grammarians, Eustathius, Suidas, and Tzetzes. A story preserved by Athenaeus further shows that the tradition of antiquity represented him as having a genius for lively description<sup>1</sup>. On the whole, then, there seems to be no good reason for doubting that the Characters are his genuine productions<sup>2</sup>.

<sup>1</sup> According to Apollodorus ap. Diog. v. 58 he died in Ol. 123 (288—284 B.C.). According to Diogenes (v. 40), he died at 85 years of age. This places his birth in 373—369 B.C., and makes him 11—15 years younger than Aristotle.

Original form of the Characters.

But did they originally form a separate book? Or have they been extracted from some other work or works of Theophrastus? This question, unlike the former, cannot be answered with any confidence: we can only balance the probabilities.

The opinion that they formed an independent work.

The principal champion in recent times of the belief that the Characters represent an independent work has been F. Ast, the author of the Lexicon Platonicum. When his edition was published at Leipzig in 1816, the theory of extracts was already current in Germany. In his Prolegomena he re-asserts the older view by an appeal to the evidence of style. There are, he says, three

Ast's argument.

<sup>1</sup> Athen. I. p. 21 A.

<sup>2</sup> Dobree thus refers to the opinion of Porson:—'Putabat scilicet, nisi me vehementer fallit memoria, falso tribui Theophrasto Characteras, antiquos tamen esse concedens' (Pors. Notae in Ar., Plut. 1021). Had Porson left on record his reasons for this opinion, they would have been of great interest. As it is, we have only a dictum vaguely reported.

styles in which character may be described. First the philosophical, having for its aim to teach. Secondly the rhetorical, having for its aim to move. Thirdly, what he calls the 'mimicum genus,' the farcical; having for its aim simply to amuse. The proper subjects for this style are qualities neither virtuous nor vicious<sup>1</sup>, but morally indifferent; its excellences are truth, tact, brevity; its results should be 'witty pictures—idylls—of human character, drawn from nature itself, with no purpose but to please'<sup>2</sup>. These conditions are, he thinks, fulfilled by the Characters of Theophrastus. They are essentially in this humorous style; they cannot, therefore, have been culled from a philosophical or rhetorical work. As we shall endeavour to show by and by, there is an element of truth in this view. But, in the precise form which Ast gives to it, it appears slightly fantastic. Granting that the laws which he lays down for the 'farcical' style are just, it cannot be said that the Characters of Theophrastus strictly obey them. Truth, tact, conciseness, are doubtless among the merits of these sketches. But the qualities described are not such as the author, at least, thought 'morally indifferent.' Many of them are identical with 'vices' treated by Aristotle and Eudemus; all of them, as being extremes, are vices in the meaning of the Peripatetic school to which Theophrastus belonged. Ast's rule that such descriptions should simply amuse is a test not easy to apply; but he saves us this trouble by avowing that three chapters—the Oligarch, the Patron of Rascals, and the Superstitious Man—do not satisfy it; and regards them, on this and other grounds, as spurious. The same objection might surely be urged with equal force against some others,—notably against the chapters on Irony and on Evilspeaking.

<sup>1</sup> Proleg. p. 13 'res vel materia...neque praestans et ad virtutem insignis neque turpis et foeda erit, sed eiusmodi quae propter suam ipsa naturam iocum et risum admittat; igitur ex earum rerum numero erit quas indifferentes dicimus.'

<sup>2</sup> Proleg. p. 26 'mimos, h. e. lepidas humanorum morum imagines (quasi εἰδύλλια) ex ipsa natura expressas, quibus mera delectatio sit proposita.'

But, when we have rejected Ast's theory of the style in which the Characters are composed, we have still to consider the value of his general result. The theory that these sketches formed part or the whole of a special work starts with an advantage ; the burden of proof rests with those who deny it. Nor, indeed, can it be disproved. But a number of circumstances, which severally are not of great weight, combine to render it improbable. In the first place, not only do the manuscripts vary much in the number of chapters which they contain, but they represent three distinct revisions or editions ; in one of which the same chapters are longer, and in another shorter, than in the third. If the Characters once formed a definite whole, the volume has had a fate which could not easily be paralleled ; for, whereas its original unity ought to have secured something like a uniform tradition, it has been handed down, not merely with various texts, but in a number of different shapes and sizes. Next, if we consider that portion of the contents, and that arrangement of them, upon which the manuscripts agree, we shall discover a want of symmetry and a confusion hardly reconcileable with the supposition that the book was put forth in this form by its author. Some qualities are treated, for no evident reason, with much greater fulness than the rest. Three chapters are given to the Love of Money, considered in finer gradations than are recognised in any other case; Talkativeness, again, and the qualities allied to Shamelessness, are especially favoured; while such complex ideas as Pride and Cowardice are dismissed in one chapter each. The order of the chapters is also capricious. Qualities so much alike that juxtaposition is necessary for distinction, are placed apart; nor is contrast, any more than resemblance, a principle of the arrangement. Yet upon this arrangement the manuscripts agree. Unless such an order had ancient authority, it could scarcely have maintained itself against reason and convenience in all the manuscripts; on the other hand it is scarcely conceivable that it can represent the author's final design. An explanation of the fact will be suggested presently; we are now concerned only with the fact itself. Three things, then, seem against the view that the Characters, as now extant, originally formed a single work; the multiform tradition; the unsymmetrical plan; the confused arrangement. If it is contended that the Characters, though not the whole, may be a fragment of such a work, the first and third of these difficulties have still to be met ; for the second is substituted that of explaining how it happened that part of a volume presumably small should have been preserved in a number of copies which testifies to its popularity, while the other part has been so completely lost that no trace remains of it.

The opinion that the Characters are extracts from some other work or works is less open to obvious objections, and is that to which recent scholars have generally inclined. It has been held in different forms, which have gradually become more and more precise. Schneider, in the preface to his edition published in 1799, was content to surmise that these extracts were made 'at various times and by various persons' from 'some larger ethical work' of Theophrastus. This is certainly to put the theory in its least probable shape. The gradual formation of the book would account, indeed, for the confused order of its chapters ; but how can it be supposed that such a collection was made gradually 'by various men and at various times'? If, when the first of these had selected two or

Theory that the Characters are extracts.

*Schneider's
view.*

three sketches, he held his hand, what singular good fortune transmitted to the next labourer this small beginning of a book, and so passed the slowly growing volume through these mysterious inheritors of a purpose? It is surely simpler to suppose that a task of such very moderate compass was completed by the person who conceived it. But upon what book or books did this person draw? Schneider says merely on 'a larger ethical work': but some later writers have spoken more definitely.

Works from which the Characters may have been taken.

Theophrastus is known to have been the author of two large works on moral philosophy; one of these was called ἡθικά<sup>1</sup>, and was perhaps a collection of special treatises; the other was entitled περὶ ἠθῶν, and was probably analogous in plan to the Nicomachean Ethics of Aristotle, but more comprehensive. It is now a favourite opinion that the Characters were derived from the latter of these works<sup>1</sup>, or perhaps from both<sup>2</sup>.

<sup>1</sup> Plutarch in his Life of Pericles, c. 38, quotes an anecdote as given by Theophrastus ἐν τοῖς ἡθικοῖς. The other work, περὶ ἡθῶν, is mentioned by a scholiast on the Nicomachean Ethics, IV. 2, p. 1121 A, in Cramer's Anecdota Parisina, I. p. 194, who says that the avarice of Simonides of Ceos, on which Aristotle touches, was noticed also by Theophrastus ἐν τοῖς περὶ ἡθῶν. Athenaeus says too (xv. p. 673 E), that Adrantus (or as it is now generally read, Adrastus) wrote 'five books on the questions of history and language (τὰ καθ' ἱστορίαν καὶ λέξιν ζητούμενα) in the περὶ ἡθῶν of Theophrastus, and one book on those in the Nicomachean Ethics of Aristotle.' That the περὶ ἡθῶν and the ἡθικά were distinct works, and that each consisted of several books, appears from the statement of the grammarian Eustratius (on

the Eth. Nicom. v. 2, p. 1129 B) that a certain verse there quoted was ascribed by Theophrastus, in the first book of the περὶ ἠθῶν, to Theognis; but, in the first book of the ἠθικὰ, to Phocylides. Zeller agrees with Petersen in supposing the περὶ ἠθῶν to have been a work of the same kind as the Nicomachean Ethics, but 'more comprehensive.' Usener, in his Analecta Theophrastea, (1858,) an examination of the catalogue of the works of Theophrastus in Diog. v. 42—50, supposes that the ἠθικὰ was a collection of essays like those περὶ εὐδαιμονίας, περὶ εὐτυχίας, περὶ κολακείας mentioned by Diogenes,—put together by the grammarian Andronicus, who is said by Porphyry (Vit. Plot. 24) to have rearranged the writings of Theophrastus (Anal. Theophr. p. 22). Besides these special treatises, and the Characters, Diogenes mentions only ἠθικῶν σχολῶν α', which, Zeller thinks, may have been identical with part of the περὶ ἠθῶν or of the ἠθικὰ.

<sup>1</sup> Speaking of the epitomes from the writings of Theophrastus mentioned by Diogenes, Usener says: 'eodem pertinent etiam ἠθικὸν χαρακτήρες, in rhetoricum usum, quae est Hermanni Sauppilii coniectura ueri simillima, ex Theophrasti libris περὶ ἠθῶν excerpti' (p. 18).

<sup>2</sup> 'Aus einem dieser Werke, oder auch aus beiden, scheinen ...die Schilderungen von Fehlern entlehnt zu sein, welche in unsern "Charakteren" zusammengestellt sind' (Zeller Philos. der Gr. II. 2, p. 684 note).

The claims of the περὶ ἡθῶν have lately been urged in an elaborate and able essay by Dr. E. Petersen. We will attempt to give an outline of his argument, and to consider its value.

*Petersen's view—the Characters taken from the περὶ
ἡθῶν.*

After touching upon some notices of the lost work περὶ ἡθῶν, which suggest that it went over nearly the same ground as the Nicomachean Ethics, Petersen expresses the belief that yet clearer traces of this work are to be found in an extant author. Stobaeus in his 'Eclogues' sketches the ethical system 'of Aristotle and the other Peripatetics,' and in one place quotes Theophrastus by name in support of a particular statement. Petersen endeavours to show that the whole of this exposition was probably derived from the περὶ ἡθῶν of Theophrastus; that, therefore, the περὶ ἡθῶν treated of (at least) all those qualities which are cited in illustration by Stobaeus; and that, since twelve of these correspond with qualities described in the Characters, it is so far possible that the Characters may have been derived from the περὶ ἡθῶν. The first position is defended at length. To make it probable that Stobaeus was indebted to a work which not only is not extant, but of which the nature can only be conjectured, is certainly no easy task; and, on the other hand, we would not willingly undertake to show that it was improbable. It will suffice to quote a criticism upon this part of Petersen's theory by the historian of Greek philosophy, Dr E. Zeller<sup>1</sup>. 'Since the latest source used by Stobaeus is at all events a much later one (than Theophrastus),—as one sees from the frequent introduction of Stoic terminology and the elaborate apologetic references to Stoic doctrines, and as is also probable from Cic. de Fin. v.;—since, too, a partial agreement with Theophrastus warrants no conclusion as to the remaining contents of the extract;—we cannot use it (with the exception of one passage in which Theophrastus is named, p. 300) as evidence for the doctrine of this teacher.'

It appears to us, however, that Petersen might resign his special theory regarding the passage in Stobaeus without damage to his main position, viz. that the Characters were derived from the περὶ ἡθῶν. Everyone would allow that if, as is likely on other grounds, the περὶ ἠθῶν was a work similar to the Nicomachean Ethics, it probably treated of many qualities identical with those described in the Characters. The real difficulties are of a kind out of which Stobaeus could not help us.

<sup>1</sup> Zeller Philos. der Gr. II. 2, p. 684 note.

First objection to Petersen's view.—Nature of some of the subjects of the Characters.

The first may be stated thus. Admitting that many, or that most, of the characters may have been extracted from a formal treatise on morals, are there not some for which such a source is inconceivable? Consider, for instance, the sketches of the Newsmaker, of the Late-learner, of the Oligarch, of the Patron of Rascals. Each of these must, on Petersen's assumption, have been treated in the lost philosophical work; and, if this work was on the plan of Aristotle's Ethics, each must have been considered in relation to an opposite and to an intermediate quality. Petersen labours hard to reconstruct these συζυγίαι or trios; but it is not surprising that personages such as those just named are somewhat refractory under the process. The Newsmaker, with all that is distinctive in his genius unrecognised, subsides into a place under the notion of Loquacity, though doubts are expressed whether he would not have been an equally loyal dependent of Boastfulness. The names of the vicious character to which he is opposite, and of the virtuous one in regard to which he is extreme, are not specified. The Late-learner is dealt with yet more summarily. He is merely pronounced to be a variety of the Idly-laborious; and, when it has been briefly suggested that Industry is the virtue from which he has strayed, he is left with his more special relations unexplained. The Oligarch is declared—with a partiality somewhat oligarchical—to be the opposite of the Reckless man (ἀπονενοσμένος); the intermediate character being the Popular (δημοτικός). The Patron of Rascals is still more strangely situated; he is given for his vis-à-vis the Arrogant Man, and the character between them is styled φιλίδημος, the Friend of the People.

Whether such groups can have had place in a work on moral science, is a question which everyone must judge for himself. It would not, perhaps, be easy, with the given materials, to form an arrangement which should not be liable to criticism in at least the same degree as Petersen's. The Newsmaker, the Late-learner, and the rest, could never be accurately fitted into any of those round or square holes which are prepared for abstractions. They are not ideal men, in each of whom a quality is personified; they are real, and therefore complex. Moreover they have been regarded, not from the philosopher's, but from the artist's point of view; they have not been analysed, but drawn as they strike the eye, in such wise that the laws of anatomy are of less moment than the rules of perspective. Now, as Petersen himself has conclusively shown elsewhere, the genuineness of all thirty Characters rests upon the same evidence. No hypothesis of their origin can be accepted which will not apply to every one of them. If, then, the derivation from a formal work on morals appears unlikely for some chapters, it must be pronounced unlikely for all.

Second objection.—

Style of the Characters generally.

The second difficulty involved in the view which we are discussing arises from the style of the Characters generally. Would descriptions of this kind have been admitted into a philosophical work? Petersen has met this objection fairly, though not, as it appears to us, victoriously. Theophrastus merely wished, he says, to embody each fault, with the utmost truth and clearness, in a person who should be typical of a class. If the resulting portraits 'move laughter rather than indignation,' this is due partly to the nature of the subject, partly to that of the author. Most of the qualities described are such as hurt the possessor more than anyone else; and Theophrastus seems to have had a very keen sense of the ridiculous. To these remarks we readily assent; but they do not appear to meet the case. The difficulty is, not that the descriptions are amusing, but that they are written as if their principal aim was to amuse. No one would object to philosophical truths receiving humorous illustration. But when a delineation of character has been so worked up that every sentence is a point or a witticism, its fitness to illustrate general truths is spoilt by the interest of its details. A writer whose first object was to show by examples how certain principles work, would do ill if he set before the imagination a mass of particulars so humorous that the thought of principles must at least be undermost.

Petersen contends, however, that passages similar in style to the Characters are actually found in Aristotle's Ethics. We will now turn to these, and inquire how far the resemblance goes.

Analogy of passages in the Nicom. Ethics to the Characters examined.

The first passage in which he discovers an approach to the manner of Theophrastus is the discussion upon Courage (Eth. N. IV. 5—9). We translate the remarks which he cites:—(1) 'The rash are headlong, and, though ready enough before dangers, yet in dangers fall away; but the courageous are in action keen, and, before it, quiet.' Eth. N. IV. 7. (2) 'Regular troops turn cowards when the peril becomes pressing and they are inferior in numbers or equipment. They are the first to run away.' IV. 8. (3) 'Such' (i. e. occasions of sudden death) 'are especially the chances of war; not but that the courageous man is fearless also at sea.' IV. 6. And (4) from the comparison of Intemperance with Cowardice, IV. 12: 'Such things distract the mind with pain, so that men throw away their arms and otherwise incur disgrace.'

Aristotle refers here to particular occasions on which cowardice is displayed, and even to particular acts which the coward does. But these are referred to in general terms, and in direct connexion with the general laws which they exemplify. Turn now to the chapter on Cowardice in the Characters of Theophrastus. It consists of two little stories, each elaborated to the highest point, and set off with a profusion of lively details. The first runs thus:—‘The Coward is one who, on a voyage, will protest that the promontories are privateers; and, if a high sea gets up, will ask if there is anyone on board who has not been initiated. He will put up his head and ask the steersman ‘if he is half-way yet’; remarking to the person sitting next him that ‘a dream makes him feel uneasy’; and he will take off his tunic and give it to a slave; or he will beg them to set him ashore.’

Is it easy to suppose this embodied in a work similar to the Nicomachean Ethics?

But more stress is laid by Petersen on two other cases,—the delineations of the Magnificent and of the Magnanimous Man. From the former he makes this extract :—‘ There are cases of expenditure which we call honourable ; for instance, the presentation to the gods of offerings, temple-furniture, sacrifices ; all things, in like manner, which concern the divine nature generally, or which are subjects of honourable rivalry in regard to the common weal ; as when men deem in any case that they are bound to put a chorus on the stage, to equip a trireme, or perhaps to feast the town, in splendid style . . . In private life [the occasions for magnificence] are those which occur but once,—a marriage, for instance, or anything of that kind,—and those which excite the interest of the whole community, or of its most respected members ; preparations, again, for the reception or for the departure of guests ; and the making or the recompensing of gifts. It also belongs to the Magnificent Man to furnish his house suitably to his wealth.’ (Eth. IV. 2.)

With the particulars of this statement Petersen compares some special points in the three chapters of Theophrastus on Penuriousness, Meanness, and Avarice. But a safer mode of proceeding is surely to compare the general style of the passage in Aristotle with the general style of any one of these. Take, for example, the first few sentences of the chapter on Meanness:—‘The Mean Man is one who, having gained the prize in a tragic contest, will dedicate a wooden scroll to Dionysus, having had it inscribed with his own name. When subscriptions are being raised in the ecclesia, he will rise without saying a word, and walk out of the assembly. When he is celebrating his daughter’s marriage, he will sell the flesh of the animal sacrificed, save what is due to the altar; and will hire the attendants at the marriage festival on condition that they find their own board. When he is trierarch, he will spread the steersman’s rugs under him upon the deck, and put his own away.’ Here, as in the former case, the difference between the two kinds of writing is well seen. Aristotle, bent on illustrating principles, touches on facts by the way. Theophrastus, studying to produce a picture, combines groups of facts within a framework which is itself scarcely observed.

It remains to consider the passage upon which Petersen chiefly relies,—the famous description of the Magnanimous Man, which he pronounces 'most like of all, both in matter and in manner,' to the Characters. Eth. N. IV. 3 :—' Now the Magnanimous Man despises others justly... It is of his nature to confer benefits, but he is ashamed to receive them. He seems, also, to remember whom he has benefited, but not those from whom he has received benefits. Again, it is characteristic of him to ask no favours, or to ask them reluctantly, but to do a service readily ; to show himself haughty to men of rank or fortune, but kindly to those of middle station.... He will not court objects of common ambition, or go where others are foremost.... He will be inactive and dilatory save where there is question of great honour or of a great work ; he will engage in few things, but these shall be great and famous. He must needs be frank, too, in his hatreds and in his likings : for disguise belongs to fear.... He will speak and act openly.... He will be ironical to the many... not prone to admire... not apt to bear a grudge... no gossip... Nor, again, is he lavish of praise ; and for the same reason he speaks no evil ; not even of his enemies, unless it be to show his scorn....Again he is apt to possess beautiful and unfruitful things rather than those which yield fruit and profit; for this better becomes an independent man. Slow movement, also, deep tones, deliberate speech, seem to become the man of a great soul.... Such, then, is the Magnanimous Man.'

Is it true that 'this description is removed only by the smallest interval from those of Theophrastus'; and that 'the differences are in things which must, if the nature of his genius is considered, have given rise to his style of description'?

In the first place it should be noticed that the above extract, which we have given as Petersen gives it, does not accurately represent the general tenor of the passage. To every special characteristic of the Magnanimous Man Aristotle subjoins, as usual, a statement of the principle on which it depends. Thus to the remark that 'it is his character to confer benefits, but he is ashamed to receive them,' is added, 'for the one becomes a superior, the other an inferior'; and so, throughout, each action has its theory appended to it. The complexion of the entire passage is therefore very different from that of the epitome. It is not simply a series of picturesque instances. These instances are ranged upon a groundwork of connected reasonings; and it is never for a moment obscure that the artistic purpose is secondary to the philosophical. If in the next place we consider the terms in which the particular actions of the Magnanimous Man are described, the difference between Aristotle and Theophrastus will again be clear. These terms are always general. The Magnanimous Man 'shows himself haughty to men of rank or fortune.' When Theophrastus is describing Arrogance, he is not content with saying that the Arrogant Man is haughty to all the world. 'The Arrogant Man,' he tells us, 'is one who will say to a person who is in a hurry that he will see him after dinner when he is taking his walk.' Aristotle says that the Magnanimous Man 'will not court objects of common ambition.' Theophrastus would have told us that such a person scorns to walk through the Market-place in his spurs, or to speak of the privilege which Antipater has conferred upon him of exporting timber free of duty.

To conclude: The theory that the Characters are extracts from a philosophical work appears to us improbable for two reasons. First, because of the subjects of certain chapters. Secondly, because of the style of all; and the latter objection cannot be overcome by a comparison of passages in the Nicomachean Ethics.

In the course of an attempt to examine several views of this question, it has been impossible to do full justice to the learning and ability with which Dr. Petersen has urged his own. It is an opinion which has struck deep root in Germany; which many of her foremost scholars in recent times have asserted or allowed; and which will probably remain the general faith about the Characters of Theophrastus. We have endeavoured to give fairly the substance of the chief arguments for it, and to explain why they do not satisfy us. If, then, the theory of an independent book and the theory of extracts are both to be rejected, what hypothesis remains? We will suggest in as few words as possible that solution of the question which appears to us least improbable.

Theophrastus wrote from time to time, for Another hypothesis.

his own amusement and that of his friends, short sketches of characters common in everyday life, allowing free scope in these to his gift for lively satire. These playful pieces were handed about in his intimate circle, but were never formed into a regular book ; either because sketches so desultory did not readily lend themselves to a plan and an arrangement, and their author did not care to force them ; or because he thought pieces so slight unworthy of his reputation and of his position as Aristotle's successor. At his death these several pieces, already famous among a few, passed into a wider currency than had been permitted to them during his life. Copies were multiplied ; but some contained more pieces, some fewer ; in some a particular piece was given at greater extent than in others. For there was no authentic volume to which appeal could be made ; the sketches had been circulated privately, and not necessarily all together ; no public edition had furnished a standard text, or stamped the collection as a definite whole. Thus may be explained the circumstance which has already been noticed as adverse to Ast's theory of an independent book, and which Zeller notices as favourable to the theory of extracts,—the looseness of the manuscript tradition. Thus, too, the absence of symmetry in the contents ; for either Theophrastus, writing, as fancy prompted, may have dwelt most largely upon certain characters in which the materials for description were peculiarly full and rich ; or part of what he wrote about others may have been left out in the copies from which ours have come. Lastly the order in which the chapters are arranged, which can hardly have been due to the author's design, but which yet has ancient authority, is intelligible if it represents the order into which the sketches chanced to have fallen in one or more of the collections made soon after the death of Theophrastus, and which, as being known to date nearly from his time, was respected by the Alexandrian grammarians. With these advantages the view just suggested combines the chief recommendation of that which supposes the Characters to represent an independent book published by Theophrastus. It justifies the grotesque subjects of some chapters, and the pointedly humorous style of all, on the plain ground that these sketches were written for their own sake, and were never episodes of a graver work<sup>1</sup>.

*Traces of a later hand.
The proem.*

But whatever view may be held regarding the origin of the book, on one point there can be no doubt; as we possess it, it bears the marks of a later hand. This hand is seen in the proem, in the clauses added at the end of certain chapters, and probably in some of the definitions. The common consent of critics has long pronounced the proem spurious. Theophrastus is made to say in it that he is about to record the experience of ninety years and nine—a startling statement, made apparently in the belief that his great age would be most impressive if it were put just short of the century. Diogenes says that Theophrastus died at eighty-five. The assertion in the proem has, indeed, thus much of internal evidence in its favour—that some of the sentiments found in that composition are strongly suggestive of second childhood. ‘Often before now,’ says the writer, ‘have I applied my thoughts to the puzzling question—one, probably, which will puzzle me for ever—why it is that, while all Greece lies under the same sky, and all the Greeks are educated alike, it has befallen us to have characters variously constituted.’ It is not of great moment to inquire why the proem promises descriptions of good as well as of bad men. There may have been a vague tradition that the book once included sketches of virtues corresponding to those of the vices; or this may have been the private opinion of the literary forger. Accordingly he wrote such a preface as he conceived that the book might, in its complete state, have had<sup>1</sup>.

<sup>1</sup> It may be mentioned, merely as an illustration, not of course as an argument from analogy, that the history here supposed for the Characters of Theophrastus was in fact nearly that of a similar book in modern times, Earle's Microcosmographie. In the notice 'To the Reader Gentile or Gentle' Earle says: 'I haue for once aduentur'd to playe the Mid-wife's part, helping to bring forth these Infants into the World, which the Father would haue smothered: who hauing left them lapt vp in loose Sheets, as soon as his Fancy was deliuered of them; written especially for his Priuate Recreation, to passe away the time in the Country, and by the forcible request of Friends drawne from him; Yet passing seuerally from hand to hand in written Copies, grew at length to be a pretty number in a little Volume; and among so many sundry dispersed Transcripts, some very imperfect and surreptitious had like to haue past the Presse, if the Author had not vsed speedy meanes of prevention.'

<sup>1</sup> Petersen has used the undoubted spuriousness of the

Clauses. Six chapters<sup>1</sup> end with clauses which are not only feeble in themselves, but are foreign to the style of the Characters. It is now generally believed that they were added by some one who could not perceive that the quiet humour of the descriptions was spoilt by hortatory comments. One only of the number—the paragraph added to the sketch of the Newsmaker—has a faint tinge of the manner of Theophrastus; but it betrays itself by its general tone, and especially by the opening and concluding sentences. Another case—the brief addition to the chapter on φιλοπονηρία—might admit of doubt; but this again will be condemned if the test of general style is applied.

The Definitions.

The spurious element in the Definitions cannot be so easily separated; for, even if the proem as an argument against the original unity of the book. The forger added it, he thinks, 'ut speciem hae unitatis haberent laciniae.' I abstained above (pp. 17 ff.) from using this argument, because it seemed to me two-edged. Suppose that, in the forger's time, it was known that the Characters had once formed a single book, and that this book had had a proem, which was no longer extant. The desire of restoring it would have been motive enough for the forgery.

<sup>1</sup> In this ed., nos. v. (usually 1.), xvi. (vi.), xviii. (iii.), xx. (viii.), xxi. (xxviii.), xxx. (xxix.).

text were always certain, the fitness of the definition to the subject, which has generally been made a principal test of authenticity, is a question on which opinions differ endlessly. We will not venture to do more than state our impression that some of the definitions stand just, some nearly, as Theophrastus wrote them; that some have been mutilated more seriously; and that a few have been added by a later hand to chapters which the author had perhaps left without any definition.

If it is asked when and by whom the Date and author of the interpolations. proem and clauses were probably added, Petersen's conjecture appears very probable,—that they are due to a rhetorician of the second or third century of the Christian era. He supposes that the same person extracted the Characters from the Περὶ Ἠθῶν, and therefore places him earlier than Diogenes Laertius (circ. 210 A.D), to whom they were known as forming a separate book. But, if the Characters are not supposed to be extracts, it is unimportant whether the interpolator lived before or after that writer. The age of the Ptolemies, and the second and third Christian centuries, are known to have been periods in which literary frauds were common. An Alexandrian forger of the earlier period, however, would probably have done his work more neatly and more cautiously than the author of the poem; and it seems more likely that he should be assigned to the later period. It is quite possible that he may have been a rhetorician, since the study of the leading types of character, ἦθη, was so much used in the rhetorical schools; but this likelihood is hardly much strengthened by the fact which Petersen notices, that all the MSS. which contain the Characters contain also rhetorical writings. What is spurious in the definitions can hardly be attributed to any one man, but must have come in gradually.

Arrangement of the Characters.

It has already been said that the order of the Characters, as they follow each other in the manuscripts, shows no attempt at method; and it has been suggested how this order may have arisen. To the reader it is intolerably inconvenient. Many of the Characters are separated from each other by differences so fine that they cannot easily be distinguished unless they are placed side by side. But the usual arrangement, instead of helping such comparison, makes it as difficult as possible. The chapters have been thoroughly shuffled. Those on Flattery and on Complaisance are respectively nos. 2 and 5 : those on Garrulity and Loquacity, 3. and 7 ; those on Penuriousness, Meanness, and Avarice, 10, 22, and 30 ; and so throughout. Thus a person who reads the Characters consecutively is troubled with a sense that the same traits are perpetually recurring ; but cannot, unless he often pauses and turns back, keep their several combinations clearly before him. In an edition published in 1852, Mr Sheppard made an effort to remedy the evil. He combined the Characters into eight groups, having regard to the general principle which he recognised as common to each group. This was a great improvement. His classification seems to us, however, liable to one objection. It is too scientific. In the endeavour to connect a group of characters by the principle which is their common root, he has sometimes overlooked strong resemblances which lie on the surface, and which, in sketches like these, form the practically important affinities. For instance, he classes Arrogance with Boasting,

*Sheppard's
arrangement.*

Petty Ambition, and Late-learning, because deep down in all these may be found Egotism; but Surliness with Grumbling, Distrustfulness, and Evilspeaking, because at the root of these is an 'organic moroseness of temper.' But—to pass over the question whether these ground principles are right—has not Surliness, as described by Theophrastus, so much in common with Arrogance that each will be understood better if viewed by the light of the other?

The arrangement which we have ourselves adopted is less ambitious. It does not seek to carry generalisation higher than the small groups into which the Characters obviously fall, and aims merely at placing these in a practically convenient order. Three objects have been kept in view. (1) The juxtaposition of Characters closely akin, e.g. Penuriousness, Meanness, Avarice. (2) The juxtaposition of such as present a direct contrast, e.g. the Oligarch and the Patron of Rascals; the Ironical Man and the Boaster. (3) General continuity, as far as anything of the kind can be obtained. For example, Irony being from one point of view allied to Arrogance, the Ironical man serves to break the transition from the Arrogant man, who precedes, to the Boaster who follows him. In the same way the Late-learner bridges the chasm between Petty Ambition and Unseasonableness. The Stupid Man forms a sort of link between the Offensive Man (the dull neglecter of his person) and the Boor. The Grumbler, with his murmurs against all the world, conducts us from the Evilspeaker to the Distrustful Man, who 'presumes that all men are unjust.' In two places only are there absolute breaks, viz. after Avarice and after Superstition ; for Surliness has to Complaisance the affinity of contrast. To prevent any inconvenience in referring to other editions, the usual numbering is given side by side with our own in the list of the Characters.

II.

THEOPHRASTUS AND SOME OF HIS IMITATORS.

THE sketches of Theophrastus form perhaps the earliest extant example of a kind of writing which has been popular ever since, and which, in modern Europe especially, has an immense literature of its own. Even an outline of the history of character-writing in its chief developments would require more space and much wider knowledge than are at our command. But it may not be uninteresting briefly to compare Theophrastus with one or two of the modern writers who have taken him as their master, or who resemble him in the form of their work. The chief, or among the chief, of these are Hall, Earle, Overbury, and La Bruyère.

*Style of Theophras-
tus.*

The method of Theophrastus is to consider a quality as embodied in a representative man, and to describe it by a simple enumeration of actions which this man will do.

Classes or types of character can thus be sketched in bold, clear outline. But fine portraiture is not possible under such conditions. The subtler parts of character are scarcely the same in any two men ; and a portrait which is to give only those traits which are common to a class cannot be at the same time the accurate and intimate likeness of an individual. Again, these subtler characteristics are seen not so much in particular actions as in the relations of one action to another ; and, if minute inferences from these are to be sure, the induction must be large. A novelist is able to develope tolerably complete theories of character because he takes a long series of connected actions. But even then bare recital is not sufficient ; the less obvious relations between different parts of conduct need to be interpreted for ordinary readers. In a first-rate novel the characters are left to speak as much as possible for themselves ; but when there is risk of their meaning being missed or only half-seen, help is given by comment ; and, as they are gradually worked out, there is from time to time a pause in which whole stages of developement are reviewed. In the hands of a master this is perhaps the highest form of character-drawing. If it is contrasted with sketches such as those of Theophrastus it will be seen more clearly how and why these are rudimentary. Here we have a bare enumeration of actions not necessarily connected.

Yet this style, if incompatible with work of the highest kind, has excellences proper to it; and in attaining these Theophrastus seems to have been successful. First of them, perhaps, is definiteness. Illustrations from social life are so apt to be vague that it is important for the author to start with a very clear conception of the character which he means to draw, and to take care that the outlines do not become hazy. They will inevitably become so, unless he chooses incidents in which the quality to be exemplified is not only present but predominant. In this respect Theophrastus will, if closely studied, be found usually accurate. Thus the Penurious, Mean, and Avaricious men are described without any confusion of the ideas distinctive of each, and without the special significance of their respective actions being lost in the strong general resemblance. The same clearness of conception will be seen on comparing the portraits of the Garrulous and Loquacious men. The only instance of a certain vagueness seems to us to be the chapter on Unpleasantness; but this, very likely, is only because we have not got the right point of view.

The next essential in a sketch of this sort seems to be that it should combine, as far as may be, generality with individuality. It must be characteristic of a class, and must at the same time be so lively as to set before us a particular man whom we can see. Here, again, Theophrastus seems very good. He hits the mean between abstract statement and details which might suit this or that person, but which would rob the picture of its generic interest. He effects this, indeed, at the cost of subtlety; but this is a necessity of the style. In a style less cramping, an English writer has reached this special excellence in a far higher degree than Theophrastus did, or perhaps any one who ever lived. One of the most striking things in the 'Book of Snobs' and in some of the 'Sketches and Travels in London' is the length to which individualisation had been carried without spoiling the claims of the personages to be typical.

Lastly, a book like the Characters ought to have humour. As no direct comment is admitted, the facts must be presented in such a light and (as far as possible) in such a connection that they shall comment upon themselves. Theophrastus does not fail here, though, as a rule, his humour is somewhat broad. The best examples of it are, in our opinion, the Chapters on the Newsmaker and on the Boastful Man.

Modern Character-writers.

The Latin translation of the Characters by Casaubon, published in 1592, and his commentary which appeared six years later, probably gave an impulse to the taste among scholars for this kind of writing; though it was not unknown before<sup>1</sup>. The seventeenth century in England was especially rich in it.

<sup>1</sup> Rimbault, in the Introduction to his edition of Overbury (p. 11), mentions 'two small tracts descriptive of the characters of rogues and knaves—"The Fraternite of Vagabondes," 1565; and "A Caveat for Common Cursetors vulgarly called Vagabones, set forth by Thomas Harman," 1567.'

There was, in one particular, a rough analogy between the literature of that century in England and the Greek literature of the age of Theophrastus; both were marked by the reaction from creating to analysing<sup>1</sup>, and in both ethical analysis was a favourite subject. Fifty-six 'characters' or books of characters, published between the years 1605 and 1700, are enumerated by Dr Bliss<sup>2</sup> in his edition of Earle; and at a later time he had increased this list fourfold. The book of Theophrastus may fairly be considered as the parent of all these; for in the earliest of them which became popular it is expressly cited as the model. Hall's 'Characterismes of Vertues and Hall.

<sup>1</sup> The general intellectual characteristics of the period early in which Theophrastus lived are thus described by Heyne, in an essay de genio seculi Ptolemaeorum, printed in his Opuscula (i. 3). 'Legere litus, radere humum pennis dixeris, non facile alto se committere aut sublime ferri... Nullus itaque vehementior impetus, quo animus legentes iucunde impellatur ac perturbetur, nulla inventorum fecunditas aut sententiarum copia, aut numerosa oratio, quae omnia a divino illo spiritu incalescentibus adesse solent. Limpidos et amoenos rivulos per prata properare videas, non magnum ac vastum flumen devolvi.'

<sup>2</sup> Quoted by Arber in the Introduction to his edition of Earle's Microcosmographie, in the English Reprints, p. 7.

Vices' was published in 1608. In the 'Proœme' to the First Book he says:—'I have heere done it as I could, following that ancient Master of Moraltie, who thought this the fittest taske for the ninetie-and-ninth yeere of his age<sup>1</sup>.' It will be seen presently how often Hall was indebted in details to Theophrastus; but the broad differences are far more striking.

In the first place, Hall's method differs from that of his Greek exemplar in this important respect, in which he seems to have set the fashion to the English school. He does not merely describe certain actions proper to a character, but comments upon it in general terms; aiming at epigram, pointed expressions, lively images. For example, Theophrastus begins—'The Flatterer is a person who will say as he walks with another,
"Do you observe how people are looking at you?"' etc.; and the chapter is throughout a simple narrative of his sayings and doings.
Hall:—'The Flatterer is bleareyed to ill, and cannot see vices; and his tongue walks euer in one tracke of unjust praises, and can no more tell how to discommend than to speake true...His Art is nothing but delightfull cozenage, whose rules are smoothing and garded with periurie...Like that subtle fish, he turnes himselfe into the colour of every stone...He is the moth of liberal mens coats, the eare-wig of the mightie, the bane of Courts, a friend and a slave to the trencher, and good for nothing but to be a factor for the Diuell.' The prevalent taste for strained conceits found ample scope in delineations of character such as these. Hall is, however, less affected and wearisome in this way than some of his successors. The discursive element bears a large proportion to the descriptive, but does not overpower it.

<sup>1</sup> See p. 40.

He is further distinguished from Theophrastus by a gravity both of subject and of manner. The qualities described by the Greek writer are for the most part rather ridiculous than repulsive; the Evilspeaker is the most seriously odious person whom he has portrayed. But among the vices described by Hall are Hypocrisy, Profanity, Envy. Among the representatives of 'vertues' are the Wise man, the Faithful, the Truly-noble. The blame and the praise awarded to these are uttered with an earnestness, often with a fervour, in which the voice of the preacher is heard above that of the essayist. To judge him on the evidence of this book alone, Hall was a man of warm disposition, of much tender and noble feeling; ingenious, but not very subtle; and with no especial qualification for his task beyond a fancy fertile in illustration. His language would at times rise into something like the stately music of Milton's prose, did not the love of petty conceits too soon dwarf it and drag it down. This, for instance, in the portrait of the Wise Man:

‘His free discourse runnes backe to the ages past, and recouers euenths out of memory, and then preuenteth Tyme in flying forward to future things; and comparing one with the other can giue a verdict well-neere prophetical: wherein his conjectures are better than another's judgements.’

And this in the Faithful character:

‘The celestially spirits do not scorne his company, yea his service. Hee deales in these wordly affaires as a stranger, and hath his heart euer at home: without a written warrant hee dare doe nothing, and with it, anything. His warre is perpetuall, without truce, without intermission; and his victorie certaine: hee meets with the infernall powers, and tramples them vnder feet. The shield that he euer beares before him can neither be missed nor pierced: if his hand be wounded, yet his heart is safe: he is often tripped, seldome foiled; and if sometimes foiled, neuer vanquished.'

This talent for rhetoric sometimes carries Hall beyond the bounds of just description. But the commonest blemish of his style is a straining after antithesis. Thus the disregard of the Faithful man for his irreligious parents is called a 'holy carelessness.'

Lastly, there is one example in Hall of an innovation upon the plan of Theophrastus, which later character-writers made more largely. In 'the Good Magistrate' he describes the representative, not merely of certain moral qualities, but of the qualities proper for a certain office. By far the greater part of Overbury's and Earle's sketches are of this kind, treating of the characteristics of a certain station or calling: e.g. 'An Ostler': 'A Pyrate': 'An Elder Brother': 'A Sexton.' Overbury has in some instances pushed this style to the extreme of grotesqueness, as in his character of A Drunken Dutchman Resident in England.

With these differences of plan, method, and tone Hall is yet a real disciple of Theophrastus. Every sketch contains passages in which the concise narrative manner of the Greek writer is closely copied. The chapters on the Busiebodie and on the Slothfull Man are perhaps the best instances. Besides this general imitation, a great number of particular touches have been borrowed. One or two examples will suffice to show how directly they have been taken:—

THEOPHRASTUS.

The Flatterer.

The Flatterer is a person who will say as he walks with another, 'Do you observe how people are looking at you?'

The Penurious Man.

When a servant has

HALL.

The Flatterer.

When hee walks with his friend hee sweares to him that no man els is looked at.

The Covetous.

If his servant breake

THEOPHRASTUS.

HALL.

broken a pot or a plate
he will take the value out of his rations.

but an earthen dish for want of light, hee abates it out of his quarters wages.

The Officious Man.

He will undertake to show the path, and after all be unable to find the way.

The Busie-bodie.

This man will also thrust himself forward to be the guide of the way he knowes not.

The Distrustful Man.

The Distrustful Man is one who, having sent his slave to market, will send another to ascertain what price he gave.

The Distrustfull.

When hee hath committed a message to his seruant, he sends a second after him to listen
how it is deliuered.

Sir Thomas Overbury's 'Characters or Overbury
Witty Descriptions of the Properties of Sundry Persons' was published in 1614<sup>1</sup>. Out of eighty sketches only ten can be reckoned as descriptive of intrinsic character. The rest are concerned with such peculiarities as are brought out by certain occupations or positions in life. These are curious as illustrating manners, of which Overbury was a quick observer, and which he could represent with lively skill. For the delineation of character in the proper sense he had little talent. Tricks of behaviour and speech caught his eye ; but his reflections are generally trivial, and he had not a fine perception of moral differences. Thus in his chapter on A Proud Man he has confused the characteristics of Haughtiness and Vanity, which could hardly exist in such a union as he depicts. Hall, whose acuteness was not his strongest point, shows oftener and with less effort an insight into the springs of action. The elaborate quaintness of Overbury's language and his faculty for pointed expression render this defect more conspicuous. The novelty of the manner is frequently out of proportion to the originality of the idea. His thoughts seem overdressed ; and this, together with the sometimes coarse vehemence of the satire, often gives a vulgar air to his writing. Hallam pronounces the 'Faire and happy Milk-mayd' the best of his characters. It is very pretty, but somewhat too conventional; and to us there seems to be more true poetry in the similar picture of the Franklin. It would seem as if country life in its humbler phases had had a peculiar attraction for Overbury; that his sympathy was not extended to squires is shown by the portrait of the Country Gentleman.

<sup>1</sup> The 'Characters' were attached to his poem of A Wife, now a Widdowe. The date 1614 is given by Arber, Introd. to Earle's Microcosmographie, p. 8, and by Rimbault in his Introd. to Overbury's Works, p. 13. It must be by an oversight that, in Arber's table of the chief events during Earle's life, the date is given as 1616. Rimbault says that with the exception of two small tracts of 1565 and 1567, 'Overbury claims the distinction of being the earliest writer of Characters which this country can boast' (ib. p. 11). He overlooks Hall, who came between in 1608.

A touch in his description of A Covetous Man suggests that he had made a minute study of Hall. 'He neuer spends candle but at Christmas...in hope that his seruants will breake glasses for want of light, which they doubly pay for in their wages.' Compare Hall's, 'If his servant breake but an earthen dish for want of light, he abates it out of his quarters wages.' Whether he had read Theophrastus or not is less certain. In two places there are curious but not conclusive resemblances:—

THEOPHRASTUS.

OVERBURY.

The Penurious Man.

A Covetous Man.

He is apt also to en-

If he euer pray, it

THEOPHRASTUS.

OVERBURY.

force the right of distraining.

is that some one may breake his day, that the beloued forfeiture may be obtained.

The Arrogant Man.A Proud Man.

He will not permit himself to give any man
the first greeting.

He never salutes
first.

Earle.

A more interesting comparison is suggested by Earle's 'Microcosmographie, or a Piece of the World Discovered.' The book contains seventy-eight characters, fifty-four of which appeared in 1628, twenty-three in the following year, and one in 1633. The name of the author was never formally announced, but it was known at the time that he was John Earle, then a Fellow of Merton College, Oxford. He was in his twenty-eighth year when the first instalment of the Characters was published in 1628. Of the whole number, about thirty are properly ethical; the rest are of the same class as those which compose seven-eighths of Overbury's work, and in which the persons are viewed not as possessors of certain qualities but as players of certain parts in life. Earle is not so thoroughly at home with men of all sorts and conditions as Overbury, who had probably seen far more of the world ; nor are his reflections mingled so largely as those of Hall with bits of picturesque narrative which point their own moral. But as an analyst of human nature he is immeasurably superior to either. Theophrastus, whose severely simple plan allowed little scope for subtlety, must also yield to him in fine delineation. Earle was not merely ingenious, but had a special gift for the study of character ; his humour is of a thoughtful kind which goes beneath peculiarities of the surface to their origin in a bent or warp of the mind, for which it seeks to account ; and so, while Hall and Overbury describe traits which are recognised as true and remark smartly upon them, Earle helps us to see why they are there, and gives us a sense of comprehending the whole character better. Thus, speaking of the way in which the flatterer ministers to his patron's self-approbation, Hall says :—

Conscience hath no greater adversarie ; for when she is about to play her iust part of accusation, he stops her mouth with good termes and well-neere strangleth her with shifts.

This is a lively expression of the fact, but does not get beyond it. Earle contrives at once to state and to account for it:—

He is one neuer chides you, but for your vertues, as, You are too good, too honest, too religious; when his chiding may seeme but the earnest commendation, and yet would faine chide you out of them too: for your vice is the thing he has use of, and wherein you may best use him, and hee is neuer more active than in the worst diligences.

Of the relation of flattery to friendship, Hall says:—

Flatterie is nothing but false friendship, fawning hypocrisie, dishonest ciuilitie, base merchandize of words, a plausible discord of the heart and lips.

These ingenious phrases do nothing towards defining wherein the contrast between the flatterer and the friend consists. Earle brings out clearly a particular point of the contrast:—

His looke, conuersation, companie, and all the outwardnesse of friendshippe [are] more pleasing by odds or a true friend dare take the liberty to bee sometimes offensiue ; whereas he is a great deale more cowardly, and will not let the least hold goe, for feare of losing you.

In his chapter on the Male-Content, Hall makes this general remark upon the character :—

Nothing dislikes him but the present : for what hee condemned while it was, once past hee magnifies, and striues to recall it out of the iawes of Time.

This, after all, tells us nothing that we did not know before. Earle, describing a Discontented man, makes an observation which throws a real light on one of the causes by which such a temper is commonly produced :—

He considered not the nature of the world till he felt it, and all blowes fall on him heauier, because they light not first on his expectation.

Overbury's sketch of a Vaine-glorious Coward in Command, and Earle's of a Coward, both dwell chiefly on the bluster under which Cowardice seeks to hide itself. The bearing of the coward in society is thus described by Overbury:—

No man can worse define betweene pride and noble courtesie : he that salutes him not so farre as a pistoll carries level, gives him the disgust or affront, chuse you whether.

Earle places this same arrogance in a far more amusing and instructive light:—

Wonderfull exceptionous and cholerick where he sees men are loth to giue him occasion, and you cannot pacify him better than by quarrelling with him. . . Men fall out with him of purpose to get courtesies from him, and be brib'd againe to a reconcilment.

A general comparison of Earle with the other two English writers would show that as a rule he has deeper feeling, more acuteness, a finer humour. An instance of what we mean by his deeper feeling occurs at the end of the chapter on a Plaine Country Fellow.

For Death hee is neuer troubled, and if hee get in but his Haruest before, let it come when it wil he cares not.

This shows more sympathy with the man's inner life than would be found in Hall or Overbury. Good examples of his humour and sagacity are these remarks on the Insolent Man:—

He is one that lookes on all men as if he were very angry, but especially on those of his acquaintance, whom hee beates off with a surlier distance, as men apt to mistake him because they haue known him. And for this cause he knowes not you, till you haue told him your name, which he thinks he has heard, but forgot, and with much adoe seems to recouer. . . No vice drawes with it a more generall hostility, and makes men readier to search into his faults, and of them, his beginning : and no tale so vnlikely but is willingly heard of him, and beleeu'd.

And these on the Suspitious or Iealous Man :—

He is a fellow commonly guilty of some weaknesses, which he might conceale if hee were carelesse : Now his over-diligence to hide them, makes men pry the more. Howsoever hee imagines you have found him, and it shall goe hard but you must abuse him whether you wil or no.

A close comparison of Earle with Theophrastus would be unfair to both, since the styles in which they respectively excelled were distinct. But if it could be doubted that Earle, a distinguished classical scholar, had studied the Greek Characters then recently made popular by Casaubon, two passages would place it beyond a question:—

THEOPHRASTUS.

EARLE.

The Avaricious Man.A Sordid Rich Man.

It is just like him, too, when he is paying a debt of thirty minas, to withhold four drachmas.

Hee loues to pay short a shilling or two in a great sum, and is glad to gaine that, when he can no more.

The Boor.A Plaine Country Fellow.

He shows surprise and wonder at nothing else, but will stand still and gaze when he sees an ox or an ass or a goat in the streets.

His mind is not much distracted with objects:
but if a goode fat Cowe come in his way, he stands dumbe and astonisht, and though his haste be neuer so great, will fixe here halfe an houre's contemplation.

La Bruyère.

La Bruyère published in 1688<sup>1</sup> 'Les Caractères, ou les Mœurs de ce Siècle,' with a translation of the Characters of Theophrastus prefixed to it. He is generally reckoned as the chief modern imitator of Theophrastus; but though, like Hall, he acknowledges the Greek writer as his master, he is not his disciple in the same sense. He borrows from him the conception and the title, but not the method of his work. The 'Characters' of La Bruyère are a series of essays on the manners of the day. Each of them treats some large subject in a discursive style; one is 'de la société,' another 'du mérite personnel,' another 'de la ville,' and so forth. These essays are here and there illustrated with sketches of representative men, which may, indeed, be compared with the characters of Theophrastus, but are slighter and more hastily drawn. Many of them are said to have been portraits of the author's contemporaries; and the desire of making an unmistakeable personal allusion seems to have been often stronger than that of illustrating principles. Among the best are Arsène, in the essay 'Des Ouvrages de l'Esprit,'—the gloomy genius who belongs to a mutual-admiration society;—Phédon, in the 'Des Biens de Fortune,'—the ostentatiously humble, but sinister man;—and Cydias, in the 'De la Société,'—the suggestive talker by profession.

<sup>1</sup> The permission to print the book was obtained by the printer Oct. 8, 1687; the book was published March 10, 1688, according to M. Servois in his recent edition of La Bruyère in the series Les Grands Ecrivains de la France, vol. I. p. 91.

The freer plan of La Bruyère's work, and the more diversified society from which he drew his materials, enabled him to give it an interest far more varied than the Characters of Theophrastus can claim. Hallam's decision that 'the Greek writer, with no contemptible degree of merit, has been incomparably surpassed by his imitator<sup>1</sup>,' is in this sense just; but it must be remembered that the two works cannot be regarded as performances competing in the same line of excellence. Each has his merit, and that of La Bruyère is in perhaps the higher walk; but for this very reason a direct rivalry is impossible.

The French version of Theophrastus is spirited, but is for the most part little more than a paraphrase; and shows that La Bruyère's conception of a translator's duties was as loose as his knowledge of Greek appears to have been imperfect<sup>2</sup>. The great success,

<sup>1</sup> Introduction to the Literature of Europe, part IV. ch. 4, § 52.

<sup>2</sup> In the Character of ὀψιμαθία (D'Une Tardive Instruction, no. VIII. in our Translation) the words καὶ παρὰ τοῦ υἱοῦ μαρθεῖν τὸ ἐπὶ δόξῃ καὶ ἐπὶ δουλῆα καὶ ἐπ' οὐδράς are thus rendered:—'Il apprend de son propre fils les évolutions qu'il faut faire dans les rangs à droit ou à gauche, le manie-

however, of his book, which in six years went through eight editions, did more than anything before or since to make the name of Theophrastus popular. Imitations were numerous. One of these, Le Théophraste Moderne, attracted some notice on account of a curious mystification of which it was the subject. A pamphlet entitled 'Sentimens Critiques sur les Caractères de Théophraste de Monsieur de la Bruyère,' appeared in 1701; in which that work was reviewed in company with the 'Modern Theophrastus,' but far more severely than the latter. In the same year was published 'l'Apologie de Monsieur de la Bru-

ment des armes, et quel est l'usage à la guerre de la lance et du bouclier.' La Bruyère did not see that τὸ ἐπὶ δόρυ, 'Right Wheel,' etc., was already translated by 'évolutions—à droit,' etc.; and added the italicised words to express what he thought to be the meaning of the Greek, 'that which concerns the spear and shield'; thus translating it twice over, and the second time wrongly. M. Servois, his latest editor, observes (p. 86, note 1), that no version which La Bruyère can have had before him can have suggested this blunder: it must have been his own. Again in the chapter on ἀπιστία (De la Défiance, c. XXIII. in our translation,) after the words μάλιστα μὲν μὴ δοῦναι, where the vulgate has a lacuna since supplied by the Vatican ms., he inserts in his text a translation of three distinct conjectures made by Casaubon for the purpose of filling the gap. He did not see, or did not care, that they were proposed as alternatives.

yère,' the anonymous author of this defence took no notice, however, of the criticisms upon the 'Modern Theophrastus.' It was presently known that the 'Modern Theophrastus,' the Criticism, and the Reply, were by the same person, Brillon, a lawyer. He had done himself the honour of attacking his own book in the society of La Bruyère's; but had taken care that it should not sustain such damage as to require the services of an apologist<sup>1</sup>:

<sup>1</sup> The story is told by M. Servois in his introduction to the Caractères, p. 99.

ΘΕΟΦΡΑΣΤΟΥ ΧΑΡΑΚΤΗΡΕΣ.

THE CHARACTERS OF THEOPHRASTUS.

THE CHARACTERS.

(On the Order adopted here, see Introduction, page 43.)

			PAGE
THE FLATTERER.....✓.....	I.	usually II.	81
THE COMPLAISANT MAN .....	II.	..... V.	85
THE SURLY MAN .....	III.	..... XV.	87
THE ARROGANT MAN ...✓.....	IV.	..... XXIV.	89
THE IRONICAL MAN .....	V.	..... I.	91
THE BOASTFUL MAN.....✓.....	VI.	..... XXIII.	95
THE MAN OF PETTY AMBITION	VII.	..... XXI.	99 ✓
THE LATE-LEARNER .....	VIII.	..... XXVII.	103
THE UNSEASONABLE MAN .....	IX.	..... XII.	107
THE OFFICIOUS MAN.....	X.	..... XIII.	109
THE UNPLEASANT MAN ✓.....	XI.	..... XX.	111
THE OFFENSIVE MAN .....	XII.	..... XIX.	113
THE STUPID MAN .....	XIII.	..... XIV.	115
THE BOOR .....	XIV.	..... IV.	117
THE SHAMELESS MAN .....	XV.	..... IX.	121
THE RECKLESS MAN .....	XVI.	..... VI.	123
THE GROSS MAN.....	XVII.	..... XI.	127
THE GARRULOUS MAN .....	XVIII.	..... III.	129
THE LOQUACIOUS MAN .....	XIX.	..... VII.	131
THE NEWSMAKER .....	XX.	..... VIII.	135
THE EVIL-SPEAKER .....	XXI.	..... XXVIII.	139
THE GRUMBLER .....	XXII.	..... XVII.	143
THE DISTRUSTFUL MAN .....	XXIII.	..... XVIII.	145
THE PENURIOUS MAN .....	XXIV.	..... X.	147
THE MEAN MAN.....✓.....	XXV.	..... XXII.	151
THE AVARICIOUS MAN .....	XXVI.	..... XXX.	155
THE COWARD .....	XXVII.	..... XXV.	159
THE SUPERSTITIOUS MAN.....	XXVIII.	..... XVI.	163
THE OLIGARCH .....	XXIX.	..... XXVI.	167
THE PATRON OF RASCALS ✓	XXX.	..... XXIX.	171

[προοίμιον

ἤδη μὲν καὶ πρότερον πολλάκις ἐπιστήσας τὴν διανοίαν ἐθαύμασα, ἴσως δὲ οὐδὲ παύσομαι θαυμάζων, τί γὰρ δήποτε τῆς Ἑλλάδος ὑπὸ τὸν αὐτὸν ἀέρα κειμένης καὶ πάντων τῶν Ἑλλήνων ὁμοίως παιδευομένων συμβέβηκεν ἡμῖν οὐ τὴν αὐτὴν τάξιν τῶν τρόπων ἔχειν. ἐγὼ γὰρ, ὦ Πολύκλεις, συνθεωρήσας ἐκ πολλοῦ χρόνου τὴν ἀνθρωπίνην φύσιν καὶ βεβιωκὼς ἔτη ἐνενήκοντα ἐννέα ἔτι δὲ ὠμίληκώς πολλαῖς τε καὶ παντοδαπαῖς φύσεσι καὶ παρατεθεαμένος ἐξ ἀκριβείας πολλῆς τοὺς τε ἀγαθοὺς τῶν ἀνθρώπων καὶ τοὺς φαύλους ὑπέλαβον δεῖν συγγράφαι ἃ ἑκάτεροι αὐτῶν ἐπιτηδεύουσιν ἐν τῷ βίῳ. ἐκθήσω δέ σοι κατὰ γένος ὅσα τε τυγχάνει γένη τρόπων τούτοις προσκείμενα καὶ ὃν τρόπον τῇ οἰκονομίᾳ χρώνται· ὑπολαμβάνω γὰρ, ὦ Πολύκλεις, τοὺς υἱεῖς ἡμῶν βελτίους ἔσσεσθαι καταλειφθέντων αὐτοῖς ὑπομνημάτων τοιούτων οἷς παραδείγμασι χρώμενοι αἰρήσονται τοῖς εὐσχημονεστάτοις συνέιναι τε καὶ ὀμιλεῖν, ὅπως μὴ καταδεέστεροι ὦσιν αὐτῶν. τρέψομαι δὲ ἤδη ἐπὶ τὸν λόγον· σὸν δὲ παρακολουθήσαί τε καὶ εἰδῆσαι εἰ ὀρθῶς

[PROEM

Often before now have I applied my thoughts to the puzzling question—one, probably, which will puzzle me for ever—why it is that, while all Greece lies under the same sky and all the Greeks are educated alike, it has befallen us to have characters variously constituted. For a long time, Polycles, I have been a student of human nature ; I have lived ninety years and nine ; I have associated, too, with many and diverse natures ; and, having observed side by side, with great closeness, both the good and the worthless among men, I conceived that I ought to write a book about the practices in life of either sort.

I will describe to you, class by class, the several kinds of conduct which characterise them and the mode in which they administer their affairs ; for I conceive, Polycles, that our sons will be the better if such memorials are bequeathed to them, using which as examples they shall choose to live and consort with men of the fairest lives, in order that they may not fall short of them.

And now I will turn to my narrative: be it your part to come along with it and to see if I speak rightly. In λέγω. πρῶτον μὲν οὖν ποιήσομαι τὸν λόγον ἀπὸ τῶν τὴν εἰρωνείαν ἐξηλωκότων, ἀφείδς τὸ προοιμιάζεσθαι καὶ πολλὰ περὶ τοῦ πράγματος λέγειν· καὶ ἄρξομαι πρῶτον ἀπὸ τῆς εἰρωνείας καὶ ὀριοῦμαι αὐτήν· εἴθ' οὕτως τὸν εἴρωνα διέξειμι, ποῖός τις ἐστι καὶ εἰς τίνα τρόπον κατενήμεται· καὶ τὰ ἄλλα δὴ τῶν παθημάτων, ὥσπερ ὑπεθέμην, πειράσομαι κατὰ γένος φανερὰ καθιστάναι.]

the first place, then, I will commence my account with those who have studied Irony<sup>1</sup>, dispensing with preface or many words about the matter. I will begin with Irony and define it; next I will set forth, in like manner, the nature of the Ironical man, and of the character into which he has drifted; and then I will try, as I proposed, to make the other affections of the mind plain, each after its kind.]

<sup>1</sup> The Chapter on Irony (V in this ed.) stands first in the traditional order.

κολακείας α'.

τὴν δὲ κολακείαν ὑπολάβοι ἂν τις ὁμιλίαν αἰσχροῦ εἶναι συμφέρουσαν δὲ τῷ κολακεύοντι, τὸν δὲ κόλακα τοι-οῦτόν τινα ὥστε πορευόμενον ἅμα εἰπεῖν· ἐνθυμῇ ὡς ἀποβλέπουσι πρὸς σε οἱ ἄνθρωποι; τοῦτο οὐδενὶ τῶν ἐν τῇ πόλει γίνεται πλὴν ἢ σοί· ἡὐδοκίμεις χθές ἐν τῇ στοᾷ· πλειόνων γὰρ ἢ τριάκοντα ἀνθρώπων καθημένων καὶ ἐμπεσόντος λόγου, τίς εἴη βέλτιστος, ἀπ' αὐτοῦ ἀρξαμένους πάντας ἐπὶ τὸ ὄνομα αὐτοῦ κατενεχθῆναι· καὶ ἄλλα τοιαῦτα λέγων ἀπὸ τοῦ ἱματίου ἀφελεῖν κροκύδα, καὶ ἑάν τι πρὸς τὸ τρίχωμα τῆς κεφαλῆς ὑπὸ πνεύματος προσενεχθῇ ἄχυρον, καρφολογήσαι, καὶ ἐπιγελάσας δὲ εἰπεῖν· ὁρᾷς; ὅτι δυοῖν σοι ἡμερῶν οὐκ ἐντετύχηκα, πολιῶν ἔσχηκας τὸν πῶγωνα μεστόν, καίπερ, εἴ τις καὶ ἄλλος, ἔχεις πρὸς τὰ ἔτη μέλαιναν τὴν τρίχα· καὶ λέγοντος δὲ αὐτοῦ τι τοὺς ἄλλους σιωπᾶν κελεύσαι, καὶ ἐπαινέσαι δὲ ἀκούοντος, καὶ ἐπισημήνασθαι δὲ, εἰ παύε-ται, ὀρθῶς· καὶ σκώψαντι ψυχρῶς ἐπιγελάσαι τό τε ἱμάτιον ὥσαι εἰς τὸ στόμα ὡς δὴ οὐ δυνάμενος κατα-

I. THE FLATTERER.

FLATTERY may be considered as a mode of companionship degrading but profitable to him who flatters.

The Flatterer is a person who will say as he walks with another, 'Do you observe how people are looking at you? This happens to no man in Athens but you. A compliment was paid to you yesterday in the Porch. More than thirty persons were sitting there; the question was started, Who is our foremost man? Everyone mentioned you first, and ended by coming back to your name'. With these and the like words, he will remove a morsel of wool from his patron's coat; or, if a speck of chaff has been laid on the other's hair by the wind, he will pick it off; adding with a laugh, 'Do you see? Because I have not met you for two days, you have had your beard full of white hairs; although no one has darker hair for his years than you'. Then he will request the company to be silent while the great man is speaking, and will praise him, too, in his hearing, and mark his approbation at a pause with 'True'; or he will laugh at a frigid joke, and stuff his cloak into his mouth as if he could not repress his σχεῖν τὸν γέλωτα· καὶ τοὺς ἀπαντῶντας ἐπιστῆναι κελεύσαι ἕως ἂν αὐτὸς παρέλθῃ· καὶ τοῖς παιδίοις μῆλα καὶ ἀπίους πριάμενος εἰσενέγκας δοῦναι ὀρώντος αὐτοῦ καὶ φιλήσας δὲ εἰπεῖν· χρηστοῦ πατρὸς νεότητια· καὶ συνωνούμενος δὲ κρηπίδας τὸν πόδα φῆσαι εἶναι εὐρυθμότερον τοῦ ὑποδήματος· καὶ πορευομένου πρὸς τινα τῶν φίλων προδραμὼν εἰπεῖν ὅτι πρὸς σε ἔρχεται, καὶ ἀναστρέψας, ὅτι προήγγελκα. ἀμέλει δὲ καὶ τὰ ἐκ γυναικείας ἀγορᾶς διακουῆσαι δυνατὸς ἀπνευστί· καὶ τῶν ἐστιωμένων πρῶτος ἐπαινέσαι τὸν οἶνον, καὶ παρακείμενος εἰπεῖν· ὡς μαλακῶς ἐσθίεις· καὶ ἄρας τι τῶν ἀπὸ τῆς τραπέζης φῆσαι· τουτὶ ἄρα ὡς χρηστόν ἐστι· καὶ ἐρωτῆσαι μὴ ῥιγοῖ, καὶ εἰ ἐπιβάλλεσθαι βούλεται, καὶ ἔτι ταῦτα λέγων περιστεῖλαι αὐτόν· καὶ μὴν πρὸς τὸ οὐς προσκύπτων διαψιθυρίζειν, καὶ εἰς ἐκείνον ἀποβλέπων τοῖς ἄλλοις λαλεῖν· καὶ τοῦ παιδὸς ἐν τῷ θεάτρῳ ἀφελόμενος τὰ προσκεφάλαια αὐτὸς ὑποστρώσαι· καὶ τὴν οἰκίαν φῆσαι εὖ ἡρχιτεκτονῆσθαι, καὶ τὸν ἀγρὸν εὖ πεφυτεῦσθαι, καὶ τὴν εἰκόνα ὁμοίαν εἶναι.

[καὶ τὸ κεφάλαιον τὸν κόλακα ἔστι θεάσασθαι πάντα καὶ λέγοντα καὶ πράττοντα οἷς χαριεῖσθαι ὑπολαμβάνει.]

amusement. He will request those whom he meets to stand still until 'his Honour' has passed. He will buy apples and pears, and bring them in and give to the children in the father's presence; adding, with kisses, 'Chicks of a good father'. Also when he assists at the purchase of slippers, he will declare that the foot is more shapely than the shoe. If his patron is approaching a friend, he will run forward and say, 'He is coming to you'; and then, turning back, 'I have announced you'. He is just the person, too, who can run errands to the Women's Market without drawing breath. He is the first of the guests to praise the wine; and to say, as he reclines next the host, 'How delicate is your fare!' and (taking up something from the table) 'Now this—how excellent it is!' He will ask his friend if he is cold, and if he would like to put on something more; and, before the words are spoken, will wrap him up. Moreover he will lean towards his ear and whisper with him; or will glance at him as he talks to the rest of the company. He will take the cushions from the slave in the theatre, and spread them on the seat with his own hands. He will say that his patron's house is well built, that his land is well planted, and that his portrait is like.

[In short the Flatterer may be observed saying and doing all things by which he conceives that he will gain favour.]

ἀρεσκείας β.

ἡ δὲ ἀρέσκειά ἐστι μὲν, ὡς ὄρω περιλαβεῖν, ἔντευξις οὐκ ἐπὶ τῷ βελτίστῳ ἡδονῆς παρασκευαστική, ὃ δὲ ἄρεσκος ἀμέλει τοιοῦτός τις οἶος πόρρωθεν προσαγορεύσας καὶ ἄνδρα κράτιστον εἰπὼν καὶ θαυμάσας ἱκανῶς ἀμφοτέραις ταῖς χερσὶ μὴ ἀφιέναι, καὶ μικρὸν προπέμψας καὶ ἐρωτήσας, πότε αὐτὸν ὄψεται, ἔτι ἐπαινῶν ἀπαλλάττεσθαι· καὶ παρακληθεὶς δὲ πρὸς δίαταν μὴ μόνον, ᾧ πάρεστι, βούλεσθαι ἀρέσκειν, ἀλλὰ καὶ τῷ ἀντιδίκῳ, ἵνα κοινὸς εἶναι δοκῇ· καὶ τοὺς ξένους δὲ εἰπεῖν ὡς δικαιοτέρα λέγουσι τῶν πολιτῶν· καὶ κεκλημένος δὲ ἐπὶ δεῖπνον κελεύσαι καλεῖσαι τὰ παιδιά τὸν ἐστιῶντα, καὶ εἰσιόντα φῆσαι σύκου ὁμοιότερα εἶναι τῷ πατρὶ καὶ προσαγαγόμενος φιλήσαι καὶ παρ' αὐτὸν καθίστασθαι· καὶ τοῖς μὲν συμπαίζειν αὐτὸς λέγων ἀσκός, πέλεκυς, τὰ δὲ ἐπὶ τῆς γαστρὸς ἑᾶν καθεύδειν ἅμα θλιβόμενος.

II. THE COMPLAISANT MAN.

COMPLAISANCE may be defined as a mode of address calculated to give pleasure, but not with the best tendency.

The Complaisant man is very much the kind of person who will hail one afar off with 'my dear fellow'; and, after a large display of respect, seize and hold one by both hands. He will attend you a little way, and ask when he is to see you, and will take his leave with a compliment upon his lips. Also when he is called in to an arbitration he will seek to please, not only his principal, but the adversary as well, in order that he may be deemed impartial. He will say, too, that foreigners speak more justly than his fellow-citizens. Then when he is asked to dinner he will request the host to send for the children; and will say of them, when they come in, that they are as like their father as figs; and will draw them towards him, and kiss them, and establish them at his side,—playing with some of them, and himself saying 'Wineskin', 'Hatchet', and permitting others to go to sleep upon him, to his anguish.

αὐθαδείας γ'.

ἡ δὲ αὐθάδειά ἐστιν ἀπήνεια ὀμιλίας ἐν λόγοις, ὃ δὲ αὐθάδης τοιοῦτός τις ὁλος ἐρωτηθεὶς, ὃ δεῖνα ποῦ ἐστιν; εἰπεῖν· πράγματά μοι μὴ πάρεχε· καὶ προσ-αγορευθεὶς μὴ ἀντιπροσειπεῖν· καὶ πωλῶν τι μὴ λέγειν τοῖς ὠνουμένοις, πόσου ἂν ἀποδοῖτο, ἀλλ' ἐρωτᾶν, τί εὐρίσκει· καὶ τοῖς τιμῶσι καὶ πέμπουσιν εἰς τὰς ἐορτὰς εἰπεῖν ὅτι οὐκ ἂν γεύοιτο διδομένων· καὶ οὐκ ἔχειν συγ-γνώμην οὔτε τῷ χρώσαντι αὐτὸν ἀκουσίως οὔτε τῷ ᾧσαντι οὔτε τῷ ἐμβάντι· καὶ φίλῳ δὲ ἔρανον κελεύ-σαντι εἰσενεγκεῖν εἰπὼν ὅτι οὐκ ἂν δοίῃ ὕστερον ἤκειν φέρων καὶ λέγειν ὅτι ἀπόλλυσι καὶ τοῦτο τὸ ἀργύριον· καὶ προσπταίσας ἐν τῇ ὁδῷ δεινὸς καταράσασθαι τῷ λίθῳ· καὶ ἀναμεῖναι οὐκ ἂν ὑπομεῖναι πολὺν χρόνον οὐδένα· καὶ οὔτε ἄσαι οὔτε ῥῆσιν εἰπεῖν οὔτε ὀρχήσασθαι ἂν ἐβελῆσαι· δεινὸς δὲ καὶ τοῖς θεοῖς μὴ ἐπεύχεσθαι.

III. THE SURLY MAN.

SURLINESS is discourtesy in words.

The Surly man is one who, when asked where so-and-so is, will say, 'Don't bother me'; or, when spoken to, will not reply. If he has anything for sale, instead of informing the buyers at what price he is prepared to sell it, he will ask them what he is to get for it. Those who send him presents with their compliments at feast-tide are told that he 'will not touch' their offerings. He cannot forgive a person who has besmirched him by accident, or pushed him, or trodden upon his foot. Then if a friend asks him for a subscription he will say that he cannot give one; but will come with it by and by and remark that he is losing this money also. When he stumbles in the street he is apt to swear at the stone. He will not endure to wait long for anyone; nor will he consent to sing, or to recite, or to dance. He is apt also not to pray to the gods.

ὑπερηφανίας δ'.

ἔστι δὲ ἡ ὑπερηφανία καταφρόνησίς τις πλὴν αὐτοῦ τῶν ἄλλων, ὁ δὲ ὑπερήφανος τοιόσδε τις οἶος τῷ σπεύδοντι ἀπὸ δείπνου ἐντεύξεσθαι φάσκειν ἐν τῷ περιπατεῖν· καὶ εὖ ποιήσας μεμνήσθαι φάσκειν· καὶ βαδίζων ἐν ταῖς ὁδοῖς τὰς διαίτας κρίνειν τοῖς ἐπιτρέψασι· καὶ χειροτονούμενος ἐξόμνυσθαι τὰς ἀρχάς, οὐ φάσκων σχολάζειν· καὶ προσελθεῖν πρότερος οὔδενι θελήσαι· καὶ τοὺς πωλοῦντάς τι καὶ μισθουμένους δεινὸς κελεῦσαι ἤκειν πρὸς αὐτὸν ἅμ' ἡμέρα· καὶ ἐν ταῖς ὁδοῖς πορευόμενος μὴ λαλεῖν τοῖς ἐντυγχάνουσι, κάτω κεκυφώς, ὅταν δὲ αὐτῷ δόξη, ἄνω πάλιν· καὶ ἐστιῶν τοὺς φίλους αὐτὸς μὴ συνδειπνεῖν ἀλλὰ τῶν ὑφ' αὐτὸν τινι συντάξαι αὐτῶν ἐπιμελεῖσθαι· καὶ προαποστέλλειν δὲ ἐπ' αὐτὸν πορεύηται τὸν ἐροῦντα ὅτι προσέρχεται· καὶ οὔτε ἐπ' ἀλειφόμενον αὐτὸν οὔτε λουόμενον οὔτε ἐσθίοντα ἑᾶσαι ἂν εἰσελθεῖν. ἀμέλει δὲ καὶ λογιζόμενος πρὸς τινα τῷ παιδί συντάξαι τὰς ψήφους διωθεῖν καὶ κεφάλαιον ποιήσαντι γράφαι αὐτῷ εἰς λόγον· καὶ ἐπιστέλλων μὴ γράφειν ὅτι χαρίζοιο ἄν μοι, ἀλλ' ὅτι βούλομαι γενέσθαι, καὶ ἀπέσταλκα πρὸς σε ληψομένους, καὶ ὅπως ἄλλως μὴ ἔσται, καὶ τὴν ταχίστην.

IV. THE ARROGANT MAN.

ARROGANCE is a certain scorn for all the world beside oneself.

The Arrogant man is one who will say to a person who is in a hurry that he will see him after dinner when he is taking his walk. He will profess to recollect benefits which he has conferred. As he saunters in the streets, he will decide cases for those who have made him their referee. When he is nominated to public offices he will protest his inability to accept them, alleging that he is too busy. He will not permit himself to give any man the first greeting. X He is apt to order persons who have anything to sell, or who wish to hire anything from him, to come to him at daybreak. When he walks in the streets he will not speak to those whom he meets, keeping his head bent down, or at other times, when so it pleases him, erect. If he entertains his friends, he will not dine with them himself, but will appoint a subordinate to preside. As soon as he sets out on a journey, he will send some one forward to say that he is coming. He is not likely to admit a visitor when he is anointing himself, or bathing, or at table. It is quite in his manner, too, when he is reckoning with any one, to bid his slave push the counters apart, set down the total, and charge it to the other's account. In writing a letter, he will not say 'I should be much obliged', but 'I wish it to be thus and thus'; or 'I have sent to you for' this or that: or 'You will attend to this strictly': or 'Without a moment's delay'.

εἰρωνείας ἐΐ.

ἡ μὲν οὖν εἰρωνεία δόξειεν ἂν εἶναι, ὡς τύπῃ λαβεῖν, προσποιήσις ἐπὶ χεῖρον πράξεων καὶ λόγων, ὃ δὲ εἴρων τοιοῦτός τις οἶος προσελθὼν τοῖς ἐχθροῖς ἐθέλειν λαλεῖν, οὐ μισεῖν· καὶ ἐπαινεῖν παρόντας οἷς ἐπέθετο λάθρα, καὶ τούτοις συλλυπεῖσθαι ἡττωμένοις· καὶ συγγνώμην δὲ ἔχειν τοῖς αὐτὸν κακῶς λέγουσι καὶ ἐπὶ τοῖς καθ' ἑαυτοῦ λεγομένοις· καὶ πρὸς τοὺς ἀδικουμένους καὶ ἀγανακτοῦντας πρῶως διαλέγεσθαι· καὶ τοῖς ἐντυγχάνειν κατὰ σπουδὴν βουλομένοις προστάξαι ἐπανελθεῖν· καὶ μηδὲν ὧν πράττει ὁμολογῆσαι ἀλλὰ φῆσαι βουλεύεσθαι· καὶ προσποιήσασθαι ἄρτι παραγεγονέναι καὶ ὄψε' γενέσθαι αὐτὸν καὶ μαλακισθῆναι· καὶ πρὸς τοὺς δανειζομένους καὶ ἐρανίζοντας [ὡς ἀργύριον οὐκ ἔχει· καὶ πωλῶν λέγειν] ὡς οὐ πωλεῖ, καὶ μὴ πωλῶν φῆσαι πωλεῖν· καὶ ἀκούσας τι μὴ προσποιεῖσθαι, καὶ ἰδὼν φῆσαι μὴ ἑωρακέναι, καὶ ὁμολογήσας μὴ μεμνήσθαι· καὶ τὰ μὲν σκέψεσθαι φάσκειν, τὰ δὲ οὐκ

V. THE IRONICAL MAN.

IRONY, roughly defined, would seem to be an affectation of the worse in word or deed.

The Ironical Man is one who goes up to his enemies, and volunteers to chat with them, instead of showing hatred. He will praise to their faces those whom he attacked behind their backs, and will sympathise with them in their defeats. He will show forgiveness to his revilers, and excuse things said against him; and he will talk blandly to persons who are smarting under a wrong. When people wish to see him in a hurry, he will desire them to call again. He will never confess to anything that he is doing, but will always say that he is thinking about it. He will pretend that he has 'just arrived', or that he 'was too late', or that he 'was unwell'. To applicants for a loan or a subscription he will say that he has no money; when he has anything for sale he will deny that he means to sell; or, when he does not mean to sell, he will pretend that he does. Hearing, he will affect not to have heard, seeing, not to have seen; if he has made an admission, he will say that he does not remember it. Sometimes he has 'been εἰδέναι, τὰ δὲ θαυμάζειν, τὰ δ' ἤδη ποτὲ καὶ αὐτὸς οὕτω διαλογίσασθαι. καὶ τὸ ὅλον δεινὸς τῷ τοιούτῳ τρόπῳ τοῦ λόγου χρῆσθαι· οὐ πιστεύω· οὐχ ὑπολαμβάνω· ἐκπλήττομαι· παράδοξόν μοι τὸ πρᾶγμα· ἄλλῃ τινὶ λέγε· καὶ λέγειν ἑαυτὸν ἑτέρου ἀκηκοέναι, καὶ μὴν οὐ ταῦτα πρὸς ἐμὲ διεξήκει· ὅπως δὲ σοὶ ἀπιστήσω ἢ ἐκείνου καταγνώσκειν ἀποροῦμαι· ἀλλ' ὅρα μὴ σὺ θάττον πιστεύεις.

[τοιαύτας φωνὰς καὶ πλοκάς καὶ παλιλλογίας εὐρεῖν ἔστι τοῦ εἰρωνος. τὰ δὲ τῶν ἡθῶν μὴ ἀπλᾶ ἀλλ' ἐπίβουλα φυλάττεσθαι μᾶλλον δεῖ ἢ τοὺς ἔχεις.]

considering the question'; sometimes he does 'not know'; sometimes he is 'surprised'; sometimes it is 'the very conclusion' at which he 'once arrived' himself. And, in general, he is very apt to use this kind of phrase: 'I do not believe it': 'I do not understand it': 'I am astonished'. Or he will say that he has heard it from some one else: 'This, however, was not the story that he told me'. 'The thing surprises me': 'Don't tell me': 'I do not know how I am to disbelieve you, or to condemn him': 'Take care that you are not too credulous'.

[Such the speeches, such the doublings and retractions to which the Ironical man will resort. Disingenuous and designing characters are in truth to be shunned more carefully than vipers.]

ἀλαζονείας ε'.

ἀμέλει δὲ ἡ ἀλαζονεία δόξειεν ἂν εἶναι προσποιήσις ἀγαθῶν οὐκ ὄντων, ὃ δὲ ἀλαζὼν τοιοῦτός τις οἶος ἐν τῷ δείγματι ἐστικῶς διηγεῖσθαι ξένοις ὥς πολλὰ χρήματα αὐτῷ ἐστὶν ἐν τῇ θαλάττῃ· καὶ περὶ τῆς ἐργασίας τῆς δανειστικῆς διεξιέναι, ἡλικία, καὶ αὐτὸς ὅσα εἴληφε καὶ ἀπολώλεκε· καὶ ἅμα ταῦτα πλεθρίζων πέμπειν τὸ παιδάριον ἐπὶ τὴν τράπεζαν, δραχμῆς αὐτῷ κειμένης. καὶ συνοδοιπόρου δὲ ἀπολεύσας ἐν τῇ ὁδῷ δεινὸς λέγειν ὥς μετ' Ἀλεξάνδρου ἐστρατεύσατο, καὶ ὥς αὐτῷ εἶχε, καὶ ὅσα λιθοκόλλητα ποτήρια ἐκόμισε· καὶ περὶ τῶν τεχνιτῶν τῶν ἐν τῇ Ἀσίᾳ, ὅτι βελτίους εἰσὶ τῶν ἐν τῇ Εὐρώπῃ, ἀμφισβητῆσαι· καὶ ταῦτα δὴ φῆσαι οὐδαμοῦ ἐκ τῆς πόλεως ἀποδεδημηκῶς· καὶ γράμματα δὲ εἰπεῖν ὥς πάρεστι παρ' Ἀντιπάτρου τριττὰ δὴ, λέγοντα παραγίνεσθαι αὐτὸν εἰς Μακεδονίαν, καὶ διδομένης αὐτῷ ἐξαγωγῆς ξύλων ἀτελοῦς, ὅτι ἀπείρηται, ἕπως μὴδ' ὑφ' ἐνὸς συκοφαντηθῇ· περαιτέρω φίλος ὧν πλεῖν ἢ προσήκει Μακεδόσι· καὶ ἐν τῇ σιτοδείᾳ δὲ ὥς πλείω ἢ πέντε τάλαντα αὐτῷ γένοιτο τὰ ἀναλώματα διδόντι τοῖς ἀπόροις τῶν πολιτῶν· ἀνα-

VI. THE BOASTFUL MAN.

BOASTFULNESS would seem to be, in fact, pretension to advantages which one does not possess.

The Boastful Man is one who will stand in the bazaar talking to foreigners of the great sums which he has at sea ; he will discourse of the vastness of his money-lending business, and the extent of his personal gains and losses ; and, while thus drawing the long-bow, will send his boy to the bank, where he keeps—tenpence. He loves, also, to impose upon his companion by the road with a story of how he served with Alexander, and on what terms he was with him, and what a number of gemmed cups he brought home ; contending, too, that the Asiatic artists are superior to those of Europe ; and all this when he has never been anywhere out of Attica. Then he will say that a letter has come from Antipater—‘this is the third’—requiring his presence in Macedonia ; and that, though he was offered the privilege of exporting timber free of duty, he has declined it, that no person whatever may be able to traduce him further for being more friendly than is becoming with Macedonia. He will state, too, that in the famine his outlay came to more than five talents in presents to the distressed citi-

νεύειν γὰρ οὐ δύνασθαι. καὶ ἀγνώτων δὲ παρακαθημένων κελεύσαι θεῖναι τὰς ψήφους ἕνα αὐτῶν, καὶ ποσῶν καθ' ἐξακοσίας καὶ κατὰ μνᾶν καὶ προστιθεὶς πιθανῶς ἐκά-στοις τούτων ὀνόματα ποιῆσαι καὶ δέκα τάλαντα· καὶ τοῦτο φῆσαι εἰσηγνέχθαι εἰς ἐράνους αὐτῷ, καὶ τὰς τριηραρχίας εἰπεῖν ὅτι οὐ τίθησιν οὐδὲ τὰς λειτουργίας ὅσας λελειτούργηκε· καὶ προσελθὼν δὲ τοὺς ἵππους τοὺς ἀγαθοὺς τοῖς πωλοῦσι προσποιήσασθαι ὠνητιᾶν· καὶ ἐπὶ τὰς κλῖνας ἔλθων ἱματισμὸν ζητῆσαι εἰς δύο τάλαντα, καὶ τῷ παιδί μάχεσθαι ὅτι τὸ χρυσίον οὐκ ἔχων αὐτῷ ἀκολουθεῖ· καὶ ἐν μισθωτῇ οἰκίᾳ οἰκῶν φῆσαι ταύτην εἶναι τὴν πατρίαν πρὸς τὸν μὴ εἰδότα, καὶ ὅτι μέλλει πωλεῖν αὐτὴν διὰ τὸ ἐλάττω εἶναι αὐτῷ πρὸς τὰς ξενοδοχίας.

zens; ('he never could say No';) and actually, although the persons sitting near him are strangers, he will request one of them to set up the counters; when, reckoning by sums of six hundred drachmas or of a mina, and plausibly assigning names to each of these, he will make a total of as many as ten talents. This, he will say, was what he contributed in the way of charities; adding that he does not count any of the trierarchies or public services which he has performed. Also he will go up to the sellers of the best horses, and pretend that he desires to buy; or, visiting the upholstery mart, he will ask to see draperies to the value of two talents, and quarrel with his slave for having come out without gold. When he is living in a hired house he will say (to any one who does not know better) that it is the family mansion; but that he means to sell it, as he finds it too small for his entertainments.

μικροφιλοτιμίας ζ.

ἡ δὲ μικροφιλοτιμία δόξειεν ἂν εἶναι ὀρεξις τιμῆς ἀνελεύθερος, ὃ δὲ μικροφιλότιμος τοιοῦτός τις οἷος σπουδάσαι ἐπὶ δεῖπνον κληθεὶς παρ' αὐτὸν τὸν καλέσαντα κατακείμενος δειπνήσαι· καὶ τὸν υἷδν ἀποκεῖραι ἀγαγὼν εἰς Δελφούς· καὶ ἐπιμεληθῆναι δὲ ὅπως αὐτῷ ὁ ἀκόλουθος Αἰθίοψ ἔσται· καὶ ἀποδιδούς μνᾶν ἀργυρίου καινὸν ποιῆσαι ἀποδοῦναι· καὶ πλειστάκις δὲ ἀποκεῖρασθαι καὶ τοὺς ὀδόντας λευκοὺς ἔχειν καὶ τὰ ἱμάτια δὲ χρηστὰ μεταβάλλεσθαι καὶ χρίσματι ἀλείφεσθαι· καὶ τῆς μὲν ἀγορᾶς πρὸς τὰς τραπέζας προσφοιτᾶν, τῶν δὲ γυμνασίων ἐν τούτοις διατρίβειν οὗ ἂν ἔφηβοι γυμνάζωνται, τοῦ δὲ θεάτρου καθῆσθαι ὅταν ἡ θέα πλησίον τῶν στρατηγῶν καὶ ἀγοράζειν αὐτῷ μὲν μηδὲν, ξένοις δὲ ἐπιστάλματα εἰς Βυζάντιον ἀλμάδας καὶ Λακωνικὰς κύνας εἰς Κύζικον καὶ μέλι Ἑμήττιον εἰς Ῥόδον, καὶ ταῦτα ποιῶν τοῖς ἐν τῇ πόλει διηγεῖσθαι. ἀμέλει δὲ καὶ πίθηκον θρέψαι δεινὸς καὶ τίτυρον κτήσασθαι καὶ Σικελικὰς περιστεράς καὶ δορκαδείους ἀστραγάλους καὶ Θουριακὰς τῶν στοργγύλων ληκύθους καὶ βακτηρίας τῶν σκολιῶν ἐκ Λακεδαιμόνος καὶ αὐλαίαν ἔχουσιν Πέρσας ἐνυφασμένους καὶ αὐλίδιον

VII. THE MAN OF PETTY AMBITION.

PETTY Ambition would seem to be a mean craving for distinction.

The man of Petty Ambition is one who, when asked to dinner, will be anxious to be placed next to the host at table. He will take his son away to Delphi to have his hair cut. He will be careful, too, that his attendant shall be an Aethiopian : and when he pays a mina he will cause the slave to pay it with a new coin. Also he will have his hair cut very frequently, and will keep his teeth white; he will change his clothes, too, while still good; and will anoint himself with unguent. In the Marketplace he will frequent the bankers' tables; in the gymnasia he will haunt those places where the young men take exercise; in the theatre, when there is a representation, he will sit near the Generals. For himself he will buy nothing, but will make purchases on commission for foreign friends—pickled olives to go to Byzantium, Laconian hounds for Cyzicus, Hymettian honey for Rhodes; and will talk thereof to people at Athens. Also he is very much the person to keep a monkey; to get a satyr ape, Sicilian doves, deerhorn dice, Thurian vases of the approved rotundity, walking-sticks with the true Laconian curve, and a curtain with Persians embroidered upon it.

παλαιστριαῖον κόνιν ἔχον καὶ σφαιριστήριον, καὶ τοῦτο περιῶν χρησαί τοις φιλοσόφοις, τοῖς σοφισταῖς, τοῖς ὀπλομάχοις, τοῖς ἁρμονικοῖς ἐπιδείκνυσθαι· καὶ αὐτὸς ἐν ταῖς ἐπιδείξεσιν ὕστερον ἐπεισιέναι ἐπὶ τῷ εἰπεῖν τὸν ἕτερον τῶν θεωμένων πρὸς τὸν ἕτερον ὅτι τούτου ἐστὶν ἡ παλαίστρα· καὶ βοῦν θύσας τὸ προμετωπίδιον ἀπαντικρὺ τῆς εἰσόδου προσπατταλῶσαι, στέμμασι μεγάλοις περι-δήσας, ὅπως οἱ εἰσιόντες ἴδωσιν ὅτι βοῦν ἔθυσσε· καὶ πομπεύσας μετὰ τῶν ἱππέων τὰ μὲν ἄλλα πάντα δοῦναι τῷ παιδὶ ἀπενέγκειν οἴκαδε, ἀναβαλόμενος δὲ τοῖμάτιον ἐν τοῖς μύσῃ κατὰ τὴν ἀγορὰν περιπατεῖν. καὶ κολοιῶ δὲ ἔνδον τρεφομένῳ δεινὸς κλιμάκιον πρίασθαι καὶ ἀσπί-διον χαλκοῦν ποιῆσαι ὃ ἔχων ἐπὶ τοῦ κλιμακίου ὁ κολοιδὸς πηδῆσεται· καὶ κυναρίου δὲ Μελιταίου τελευτήσαν-τος αὐτῷ μνῆμα καὶ στηλίδιον ποιήσας ἐπιγράψαι ΚΛΑ-ΔΟΣ ΜΕΛΙΤΑΙΟΣ· καὶ ἀναθεῖς δακτύλιον χαλκοῦν ἐν τῷ Ἀσκληπιοῦ τούτου ἐκτρίβειν στυλπνῶν καὶ ἀλείφῳ ὀσημέραι. ἀμέλει δὲ καὶ συνδιοικήσασθαι παρὰ τῶν πρυτάνεων ὅπως ἀπαγγείλῃ τῷ δήμῳ τὰ ἱερὰ, καὶ παρασκευασάμενος λαμπρὸν ἱμάτιον καὶ ἐστεφανωμένους παρελθὼν εἰπεῖν ὦ ἄνδρες Ἀθηναῖοι, ἐβύομεν οἱ πρυτάνεις τῇ μητρὶ τῶν θεῶν τὰ ἱερὰ ἄξια καὶ καλὰ· καὶ ὑμεῖς δέχεσθε τὰ ἀγαθὰ· καὶ ταῦτα ἀπαγγείλας ὑπὸν διηγήσασθαι οἴκαδε τῇ αὐτοῦ γυναικὶ ὥς καθ' ὑπερβολὴν εὐήμερεῖ.

He will have a little court provided with an arena for wrestling and a ball-alley, and will go about lending it to philosophers, sophists, drill-sergeants, musicians, for their displays; at which he himself will appear upon the scene rather late, in order that the spectators may say one to another, 'This is the owner of the palaestra.' When he has sacrificed an ox, he will nail up the skin of the forehead, wreathed with large garlands, opposite the entrance, in order that those who come in may see that he has sacrificed an ox. When he has been taking part in a procession of the knights, he will give the rest of his accoutrements to his slave to carry home; but, after putting on his cloak, will walk about the market-place in his spurs. He is apt, also, to buy a little ladder for his domestic jackdaw, and to make a little brass shield, wherewith the jackdaw shall hop upon the ladder. Or if his little Melitean dog has died, he will put up a little memorial slab, with the inscription, A SCION OF MELITA. If he has dedicated a brass ring in the temple of Asclepius, he will wear it to a wire with daily burnishings and oilings. It is just like him, too, to obtain from the presidents of the Senate by private arrangement the privilege of reporting the sacrifice to the people; when, having provided himself with a smart white cloak and put on a wreath, he will come forward and say: 'Athenians! we, the presidents of the Senate, have been sacrificing to the Mother of the Gods meetly and auspiciously; receive ye her good gifts!' Having made this announcement he will go home to his wife and declare that he is supremely fortunate.

✓ ὄψιμαθίας ἢ.

ἡ δὲ ὄψιμαθία φιλοπονία δόξειεν ἂν εἶναι ὑπὲρ τὴν ἡλικίαν, ὃ δὲ ὄψιμαθὴς τοιοῦτός τις οἶος ῥήσεις μανθάνειν ἐξήκοντα ἔτη γεγονώς καὶ ταύτας λέγων παρὰ πότού ἐπιλανθάνεσθαι· καὶ παρὰ τοῦ υἱοῦ μανθάνειν τὸ ἐπὶ δόρυ καὶ ἐπὶ ἀσπίδα καὶ ἐπ' οὐράν· καὶ εἰς ἡρώα συμβάλλεσθαι τοῖς μειρακίοις λαμπάδα τρέχειν. ἀμέλει δὲ κἄν πον κληθῇ εἰς Ἡρακλεῖον ῥίψας τὸ ἱμάτιον τὸν βοῦν αἰρεῖν ἵνα τραχηλίσῃ καὶ προσανατρίβεσθαι εἰσιὼν εἰς τὰς παλαιστρας· καὶ ἐν τοῖς θαύμασι τρία ἢ τέτταρα πληρώματα ὑπομένειν τὰ ἄσματα ἐκμανθάνων· καὶ τε-λούμενος τῷ Σαβαζίῳ σπεῦσαι ὅπως καλλιστεύσῃ παρὰ τῷ ἱερεῖ· καὶ εἰς ἀγρὸν ἐφ' ἵππου ἀλλοτρίου κατοχοῦμε-νος ἅμα μελετᾶν ἱππάζεσθαι, καὶ πεσὼν τὴν κεφαλὴν κατεαγέναι· καὶ ἐν δεκάταις συνάγειν τοὺς μεθ' αὐτοῦ

VIII. THE LATE-LEARNER.

LATE-LEARNING would seem to mean the pursuit of exercises for which one is too old.

The Late-Learner is one who will study passages for recitation when he is sixty, and break down in repeating them over his wine. He will take lessons from his son in 'Right Wheel,' 'Left Wheel,' 'Right-about-face.' At the festival of a hero he will match himself against the boys for a torch-race; nay, it is just like him, if haply he is invited to a temple of Heracles, to throw off his cloak and seize the ox in order to bend its neck back. He will go into the palaestras and try an encounter; at a conjuror's performance he will sit out three or four audiences, trying to learn the songs by heart; and when he is initiated into the rites of Sabazius he will be eager to acquit himself best in the eyes of the priest. Riding into the country on another's horse, he will practise his horsemanship by the way; and, falling, will break his head. On a tenth-day festival he will assemble persons to play the συναυλῆσοντας· καὶ μακρὸν ἀνδριάντα παίζειν πρὸς τὸν ἑαυτοῦ ἀκόλουθον· καὶ διατοξεύεσθαι καὶ διακοντίζεσθαι τῷ τῶν παίδων παιδαγωγῷ καὶ ἅμα μανθάνειν παρ' αὐτοῦ κελεύειν ὥς ἂν καὶ ἐκείνου μὴ ἐπισταμένον· καὶ ὥς παλαίων δ' ἐν τῷ βαλανείῳ πυκνὰ ἔδραν στρέφειν ὅπως πεπαιδεῦσθαι δοκῇ· καὶ ὅταν ὥσι πλησίον γυναῖκες μελετῶν ὀρχεῖσθαι αὐτὸς αὐτῷ τερετίζων.

flute with him. He will play at tableaux vivants with his footman; and will have matches at archery and javelin-throwing with his children's attendant, whom he exhorts, at the same time, to learn from him,—as if the other knew nothing about it either. At the bath he will wriggle frequently, as if wrestling, in order that he may appear educated; and when women are near he will practise dancing-steps, warbling his own accompaniment.

ἀκαιρίας θ'.

ἡ μὲν οὖν ἀκαιρία ἐστὶν ἐπίτευξις λυπούσα τοὺς ἐντυγχάνοντας, ὁ δὲ ἄκαιρος τοιοῦτός τις οἶος ἀσχολομένην προσελθὼν ἀνακοινοῦσθαι· καὶ πρὸς τὴν αὐτοῦ ἐρωμένην κωμάζειν πυρέττουσαν· καὶ δίκην ὠφληκότη ἐγγύης προσελθὼν κελεῖσαι αὐτὸν ἀναδέξασθαι· καὶ μαρτυρήσων παρῆναι τοῦ πράγματος ἤδη κεκριμένου· καὶ κεκλημένος εἰς γάμους τοῦ γυναικείου γένους κατηγορεῖν· καὶ ἐκ μακρᾶς ὁδοῦ ἦκοντας ἄρτι παρακαλεῖν εἰς περίπατον. δεινὸς δὲ καὶ προσάγειν ὦνητὴν πλείω διδόντα ἤδη πεπρακότη· καὶ ἀκηκότας καὶ μεμαθηκότας ἀνίστασθαι ἐξ ἀρχῆς διδάσκων· καὶ πρόθυμος δὲ ἐπιμεληθῆναι ἃ μὴ βούλεται· τις γενέσθαι αἰσχύνεται δὲ ἀπείπασθαι· καὶ θύοντας καὶ ἀναλίσκοντας ἥκειν τόκον ἀπαιτήσων· καὶ μαστιγουμένον οἰκέτου παρεστῶς διηγείσθαι ὅτι καὶ αὐτοῦ ποτε παῖς οὕτω πληγὰς λαβὼν ἀπήγξατο· καὶ παρὼν διαίτη συγκρούειν ἀμφοτέρων βουλομένων διαλύεσθαι· καὶ ὀρχησάμενος ἄψασθαι ἑτέρου μηδέπω μεθύοντος.

IX. THE UNSEASONABLE MAN.

UNSEASONABLENESS consists in a chance meeting disagreeable to those who meet.

The Unseasonable man is one who will go up to a busy person, and open his heart to him. He will serenade his mistress when she has a fever. He will address himself to a man who has been cast in a surety-suit, and request him to become his security. He will come to give evidence when the trial is over. When he is asked to a wedding he will inveigh against womankind. He will propose a walk to those who have just come off a long journey. He has a knack, also, of bringing a higher bidder to him who has already found his market. He loves to rise and go through a long story to those who have heard it and know it by heart ; he is zealous, too, in charging himself with offices which one would rather not have done, but is ashamed to decline. When people are sacrificing and incurring expense he will come to demand his interest. If he is present at the flogging of a slave, he will relate how a slave of his own was once beaten in the same way—and hanged himself ; or, assisting at an arbitration, he will persist in embroiling the parties when they both wish to be reconciled. And when he is minded to dance he will seize upon another person who is not yet drunk.

✓ περιεργίας ι'.

ἀμέλει περιεργία δόξειεν ἂν εἶναι προσποιήσις τις λόγων καὶ πράξεων μετ' εὐνοίας, ὃ δὲ περιέργος τοιοῦτός τις οἶος ἐπαγγέλλεσθαι ἀναστὰς ἃ μὴ δυνήσεται· καὶ ὁμολογουμένου τοῦ πράγματος δικαίον εἶναι ἐνστάς ἐλεγχθῆναι· καὶ πλείον δὲ ἐπαναγκάσαι τὸν παῖδα κεράσαι ἢ ὅσον δύνανται οἱ παρόντες ἐκπιεῖν· καὶ διείργειν τοὺς μάχουμένους, καὶ οὓς οὐ γινώσκει· καὶ ἀτραποῦ ἡγήσασθαι, εἴτα μὴ δύνασθαι εὐρεῖν οὐ πορεύεται· καὶ τὸν στρατηγὸν προσελθὼν ἐρωτῆσαι, πότε μέλλει παρατάττεσθαι, καὶ τί μετὰ τὴν αὔριον παραγγέλλει· καὶ ἀπαγορεύοντος τοῦ ἱατροῦ ὅπως μὴ δώσει οἶνον τῷ μαλακιζομένῳ, φήσας βούλεσθαι διάπειραν λαμβάνειν εὖ ποτίσαι τὸν κακῶς ἔχοντα· καὶ γυναικὸς δὲ τελευτησάσης ἐπυγράψαι ἐπὶ τὸ μνήμα τοῦ τε ἀνδρὸς αὐτῆς καὶ τοῦ πατρὸς καὶ τῆς μητρὸς καὶ αὐτῆς τῆς γυναικὸς τοῦνομα καὶ ποδαπὴ ἐστὶ, καὶ προσεπυγράψαι ὅτι οὗτοι πάντες χρηστοὶ ἦσαν· καὶ ὁμνῦναι μέλλων εἰπεῖν πρὸς τοὺς παρεστηκότας ὅτι καὶ πρότερον πολλάκις ὁμώμοκα.

ἐν

X. THE OFFICIOUS MAN.

OFFICIOUSNESS would seem to be, in fact, a well-meaning presumption in word or deed.

The Officious man is one who will rise and promise things beyond his power ; and who, when an arrangement is admitted to be just, will oppose it, and be refuted. He will insist, too, on the slave mixing more wine than the company can finish ; he will separate combatants, even those whom he does not know ; he will undertake to show the path, and after all be unable to find his way. Also he will go up to his commanding officer, and ask when he means to give battle, and what is to be his order for the day after to-morrow. When the doctor forbids him to give wine to the invalid, he will say that he wishes to try an experiment, and will drench the sick man. Also he will inscribe upon a deceased woman's tombstone the name of her husband, of her father, and of her mother, as well as her own, with the place of her birth ; recording further that 'All these were Estimable Persons.' And when he is about to take an oath he will say to the bystanders, 'This is by no means the first that I have taken.'

✓ ἀηδίας ια'.

ἔστιν ἡ ἀηδία, ὡς ὄρω λαβεῖν, ἔντευξις λύπης ποίητική ἀνευ βλάβης, ὃ δὲ ἀηδὺς τοιοῦτός τις οἶος ἐγείρειν ἄρτι καθεύδοντα εἰσελθὼν ἵνα αὐτῷ λαλῇ· καὶ ἀνάγεσθαι δὴ μέλλοντας κωλύειν, καὶ προσελθὼν δεῖσθαι ἐπισχεῖν ἕως ἂν περιπατήσῃ· καὶ τὸ παιδίον τῆς τίτθης ἀφελόμενος μασώμενος σιτίζειν αὐτὸς καὶ ὑποκορίζεσθαι πομπύζων καὶ πανούργιον τοῦ πάππου καλῶν· καὶ ἐρωτῆσαι δὲ δεινὸς ἐναντίον τῶν οἰκείων· εἰπέ, μάμμη, ὅτ' ὠδινες καὶ ἔτικτές με, ποία τις ἡμέρα; καὶ [λέγειν] ὅτι ψυχρὸν ὕδωρ ἐστὶ παρ' αὐτῷ λακκαῖον, καὶ ὡς κῆπος λάχανα πολλὰ ἔχων καὶ ἀπαλὰ, καὶ μάγειρος εὖ τὸ ὄψον σκευάζων· καὶ ὅτι ἡ οἰκία αὐτοῦ πανδοκεῖον ἐστὶ μεστή γὰρ αἰεί· καὶ τοὺς φίλους αὐτοῦ εἶναι τὸν τετρημένον πίθον· εὖ ποιῶν γὰρ αὐτοὺς οὐ δύνασθαι ἐμπλήσαι· καὶ ξενίζων δὲ δεῖξαι τὸν παράσιτον αὐτοῦ, ποίος τις ἐστι, τῷ συνδειπνοῦντι· καὶ παρακαλῶν δὲ ἐπὶ τοῦ ποτηρίου εἰπεῖν ὅτι τὸ τέρψον τοὺς παρόντας παρεσκεύασται.

XI. THE UNPLEASANT MAN.

UNPLEASANTNESS may be defined as a mode of address which gives harmless annoyance.

The Unpleasant man is one who will come in and awake a person who has just gone to sleep, in order to chat with him. He will detain people who are on the very point of sailing; indeed he will go up to them and request them to wait until he has taken a stroll. He will take his child from the nurse, and feed it from his own mouth, and chirp endearments to it, calling it 'papa's little rascal.' He is apt, also, to ask before his relations, 'Tell me, mammy, —when you were bringing me into the world, how went the time?' He will say that he has cool cistern-water at his house, and a garden with many fine vegetables, and a cook who understands dressed dishes. His house, he will say, is a perfect inn—always crammed; and his friends are like the pierced cask—he can never fill them with his benefits. Also, when he entertains, he will show off the qualities of his parasite to his guest; and will say, too, in an encouraging tone over the wine that the amusement of the company has been provided for.

✓ δυσχερείας ιβ'.

ἔστιν ἡ δυσχέρεια ἀθεραπευσία σώματος λύπης πα-ρασκευαστική, ὃ δὲ δυσχερὴς τοιοῦτός τις οἶος λέπραν ἔχων καὶ ἀλφὸν καὶ τοὺς ὄνυχας μεγάλους περιπατεῖν καὶ φῆσαι ταῦτα εἶναι αὐτῷ συγγενικὰ ἀρρώσθηματ'· ἔχειν γὰρ αὐτὰ καὶ τὸν πατέρα καὶ τὸν πάππον, καὶ οὐκ εἶναι ῥάδιον αὐτοῦ εἰς τὸ γένος ὑποβάλλεσθαι....καὶ ἐλαίῳ σαπρῷ ἐν βαλανείῳ χρώμενος χρίεσθαι· καὶ χιτωνίσκον παχὺν καὶ ἱμάτιον σφόδρα λεπτὸν καὶ κηλίδων μεστὸν ἀναβαλόμενος εἰς ἀγορὰν ἐξελθεῖν.

XII. THE OFFENSIVE MAN.

OFFENSIVENESS is distressing neglect of the person.

The Offensive man is one who will go about with a scrofulous or leprous affection, or with his nails overgrown, and say that these are hereditary complaints with him; his father had them, and his grandfather, and it is not easy to be smuggled into his family...He will use rancid oil to anoint himself at the bath; and will go forth into the Marketplace wearing a thick tunic, and a very light cloak, covered with stains.

✓ ἀναισθησίας γ'.

ἔστι δὲ ἡ ἀναισθησία, ὡς ὄρω εἰπεῖν, βραδυτῆς ψυχῆς ἐν λόγοις καὶ πράξεσιν, ὁ δὲ ἀναισθητος τοιοῦτός τις οἷος λογισάμενος ταῖς ψήφοις καὶ κεφάλαιον ποιήσας ἐρωτᾷ τὸν παρακαθήμενον, τί γίνεται; καὶ δίκην φεύγων καὶ ταύτην εἰσιέναι μέλλων ἐπιλαθόμενος εἰς ἀγρὸν πορεύεσθαι καὶ θεωρῶν ἐν τῷ θεάτρῳ μόνος καταλείπεσθαι καθεύδων· καὶ λαβὼν τι καὶ ἀποθεὶς αὐτὸς τοῦτο ζητεῖν καὶ μὴ δύνασθαι εὔρεῖν· καὶ ἀπαγγέλλοντος αὐτῷ ὅτι τετελευτήκε τις αὐτοῦ τῶν φίλων, ἵνα παραγένηται, σκυθρωπᾶσας καὶ δακρύσας εἰπεῖν· ἀγαθῇ τύχῃ. δεινὸς δὲ καὶ ἀπολαμβάνων ἀργύριον ὀφειλόμενον μάρτυρας παραλαβεῖν· καὶ χεიმῶνος ὄντος μάχεσθαι τῷ παιδὶ ὅτι σικύους οὐκ ἠγόρασε· καὶ τὰ παιδιά ἑαυτοῦ παλαίειν ἀναγκάζων καὶ τροχάζειν εἰς κόπους ἐμβάλλειν· καὶ ἐν ἀγρῷ αὐτὸς φακὴν ἔψων δις ἥλας εἰς τὴν χύτραν ἐμβαλὼν ἄβρωτον ποιῆσαι· καὶ ὕντος τοῦ Διὸς εἰπεῖν, ἡδύ γε τῶν ἄστρων ὄζει, ὅτε δὴ οἱ ἄλλοι λέγουσι τῆς γῆς· καὶ λέγοντός τινος, πύσους οἶε κατὰ τὰς ἱερὰς πύλας ἐξενεχθῆναι νεκρούς; πρὸς τοῦτον εἰπεῖν· ἔσοι ἐμοὶ καὶ σοὶ γένοιντο.

XIII. THE STUPID MAN.

STUPIDITY may be defined as mental slowness in speech and action.

The Stupid man is one who, after doing a sum and setting down the total, will ask the person sitting next him 'What does it come to?' When he is defendant in an action, and it is about to come on, he will forget it and go into the country; when he is a spectator in the theatre he will be left behind slumbering in solitude. If he has been given anything, and has put it away himself, he will look for it and be unable to find it. When the death of a friend is announced to him in order that he may come to the house, his face will grow dark—tears will come into his eyes—and he will say 'Heaven be praised!' He is apt, too, when he receives payment of a debt, to call witnesses; and in winter-time to quarrel with his slave for not having bought cucumbers; and to make his children wrestle and run races until he has exhausted them. If he is cooking a leek himself in the country he will put salt into the pot twice, and make it uneatable. When it is raining he will observe 'Well, the smell from the sky is delicious' (when others of course say 'from the earth':) or if he is asked 'How many corpses do you suppose have been carried out at the Sacred Gate?' he will reply, 'I only wish that you or I had as many.'

✓ ἀγροικίας ιδ'.

ἡ δὲ ἀγροικία δόξειεν ἂν εἶναι ἀμαθία ἀσχίμων, ὁ δὲ ἀγροικὸς τοιοῦτός τις οἶος κυκεῶνα πιῶν εἰς ἐκκλησίαν πορεύεσθαι· καὶ τὸ μῖρον φάσκειν οὐδὲν τοῦ θύμου ἥδιον ὄζειν· καὶ μείζω τοῦ ποδὸς τὰ ὑποδήματα φορεῖν· καὶ μεγάλη τῇ φωνῇ λαλεῖν· καὶ τοῖς μὲν φίλοις καὶ οἰκείοις ἀπιστεῖν, πρὸς δὲ τοὺς αὐτοῦ οἰκέτας ἀνακοινοῦσθαι περὶ τῶν μεγίστων· καὶ τοῖς παρ' αὐτῷ ἐργαζομένοις μισθωτοῖς ἐν ἀγρῷ πάντα τὰ ἀπὸ τῆς ἐκκλησίας διηγείσθαι· καὶ ἀναβεβλημένος ἄνω τοῦ γόνατος καθιζάνειν· καὶ ἐπ' ἄλλῳ μὲν μηδενὶ μήτε θαυμάζειν μήτε ἐκπλήττεσθαι ἐν ταῖς ὁδοῖς, ὅταν δὲ ἴδῃ βούνῃ ἢ ἕνον ἢ τράγον ἐστηκὸς θεωρεῖν. καὶ προαιρᾶν δέ τι ἐκ τοῦ ταμείου δεινὸς φαγεῖν· καὶ ζωρότερον πιεῖν· καὶ ἀλέσαι μετὰ τῆς σιτοποιοῦ τοῖς ἔνδον πᾶσι καὶ αὐτῷ τὰ ἐπιτήδεια· καὶ ἀριστῶν δὲ ἅμα τοῖς ὑποζυγίοις ἐμβαλεῖν· καὶ κόψαντος τὴν θύραν ὑπακοῦσαι αὐτὸς, καὶ

XIV. THE BOOR.

BOORISHNESS would seem to be ignorance offending against propriety.

The Boor is one who, having drunk a posset, will go into the Ecclesia. He vows that thyſe smells sweeter than any perfume; he wears his shoes too large for his feet; he talks in a loud voice. He distrusts his friends and relatives, but talks confidentially to his own servants on the most important matters; and recounts all the news from the Ecclesia to the hired labourers working on his land. Wearing a cloak which does not reach the knee, he will sit down. He shows surprise and wonder at nothing else, but will stand still and gaze when he sees an ox or an ass or a goat in the streets. He is apt also to take things out of the storeroom and eat them; and to drink his wine rather strong. He will help the bakery-maid to grind the corn for the use of the household and for his own; he will eat his breakfast while he shakes down hay for his beasts of burden; he will answer a knock at the door himself, and call the τὸν κύνα προσκαλεσάμενος καὶ ἐπιλαβόμενος τοῦ ῥύγχους εἰπεῖν· οὗτος φυλάττει τὸ χωρίον καὶ τὴν οἰκίαν· καὶ τὸ ἀργύριον δὲ παρά του λαμβάνων ἀποδοκιμάζειν, λίαν λέγων λευρὸν εἶναι, καὶ ἕτερον ἅμα ἀλλάττεσθαι· καὶ ἂν τὸ ἄροτρον χρῆσθῃ ἢ κόφινον ἢ δρέπανον ἢ θύλακον, ταῦτα τῆς νυκτὸς [ἀπαιτεῖν] κατὰ ἀγρυπνίαν ἀναμνησκόμενος· καὶ εἰς ἅστυ καταβαίνων ἐρωτῆσαι τὸν ἀπαντῶντα πόσου ἦσαν αἱ διφθέραι καὶ τὸ τάριχος, καὶ εἰ σήμερον ὁ ἄρχων νουμηνίαν ἄγει· καὶ εἰπεῖν εὐθὺς ὅτι βούλεται καταβὰς ἀποκείρασθαι καὶ τῆς αὐτῆς ὁδοῦ παριὼν κομίσασθαι παρ' Ἀρχίου τοῦ ταρίχους· καὶ ἐν βαλανείῳ δὲ ἄσαι καὶ εἰς τὰ ὑποδήματα δὲ ἥλους ἐγκρούσαι.

dog to him, and take hold of his nosê, saying 'This fellow looks after the place and the house.' When he is given a piece of money he will reject it, saying that it is too smooth, and thereupon will take another instead; and if he has lent his plough, or a basket or sickle or bag, and remembers it as he lies awake, he will ask it back in the middle of the night. On his way down to Athens he will ask the first man that he meets how hides and salt-fish were selling, and whether the archon celebrates the New Moon to-day; adding immediately that he means to have his hair cut when he gets to town, and at the same visit to bring some salt-fish from Archias as he goes by. He will also sing at the bath; and will drive nails into his shoes.

ἀναισχυντίας ιε'.

ἡ δὲ ἀναισχυντία ἐστὶ μὲν, ὡς ὄρφ λαβεῖν, καταφρόνησις δόξης αἰσχροῦ ἕνεκα κέρδους, ὁ δὲ ἀναίσχυντος τοιοῦτος οἷος πρῶτον μὲν, ὃν ἀποστερεῖ, πρὸς τοῦτον ἀπελθὼν δανείζεσθαι· εἶτα θύσας τοῖς θεοῖς αὐτὸς μὲν δειπνεῖν παρ' ἐτέρφ, τὰ δὲ κρέα ἀποτιθέναι ἄλσὶ πάσας· καὶ προσκαλεσάμενος τὸν ἀκόλουθον δοῦναι ἀπὸ τῆς τραπέξης ἄρτον καὶ κρέας ἄρας, καὶ εἰπεῖν ἀκούοντων πάντων· εὐωχοῦ, τιμιώτατε· καὶ ὀψωνῶν δὲ ὑπομιμνήσκειν τὸν κρεωπῶλην εἴ τι χρήσιμος αὐτῷ γέγονε, καὶ ἐστηκὼς πρὸς τῷ σταθμῷ μάλιστα μὲν κρέας, εἰ δὲ μὴ, ὅσπουν εἰς τὸν ζωμὸν ἐμβαλεῖν· καὶ ἔαν μὲν λάβῃ, εὖ ἔχει, εἰ δὲ μὴ, ἀρπάσας ἀπὸ τῆς τραπέξης χολίκιον ἅμα γελῶν ἀπαλλάττεσθαι· καὶ ξένοις δὲ αὐτοῦ θέαν ἀγοράσας μὴ δοῦς τὸ μέρος θεωρεῖν, ἄγειν δὲ καὶ τοὺς νιεῖς εἰς τὴν ὑστεραίαν καὶ τὸν παιδαγωγόν· καὶ ὅσα ἐωνημένους ἄξιά τις φέρει, μεταδοῦναι κελεῦσαι καὶ αὐτῷ· καὶ ἐπὶ τὴν ἀλλοτρίαν οἰκίαν ἐλθὼν δανείζεσθαι κριθάς, ποτὲ δὲ ἄχυρον, καὶ ταῦτα χρήσαντας ἀναγκάσαι ἀποφέρειν πρὸς αὐτόν. δεινὸς δὲ καὶ πρὸς τὰ χαλκεῖα τὰ ἐν τῷ βαλανεῖφ προσελθὼν καὶ βάψας ἀρύταιναν βοῶντος τοῦ βαλανέως αὐτὸς αὐτοῦ καταχέασθαι, καὶ εἰπεῖν ὅτι λέλονται, κατὰ ἀπιῶν, οὐδεμία σοὶ χάρις.

XV. THE SHAMELESS MAN.

SHAMELESSNESS may be defined as neglect of reputation for the sake of base gain.

The Shameless man is one who, in the first place, will go and borrow from the creditor whose money he is withholding. Then, when he has been sacrificing to the gods, he will put away the salted remains, and will himself dine out; and, calling up his attendant, will give him bread and meat taken from the table, saying in the hearing of all, 'Feast, most worshipful.' In marketing, again, he will remind the butcher of any service which he may have rendered him; and, standing near the scales, will throw in some meat, if he can, or else a bone for his soup: if he gets it, it is well; if not, he will snatch up a piece of tripe from the counter, and go off laughing. Again, when he has taken places at the theatre for his foreign visitors, he will see the performance without paying his own share; and will bring his sons, too, and their attendant the next day. When anyone secures a good bargain, he will ask to be given part in it. He will go to another man's house and borrow barley, or sometimes bran; and moreover will insist upon the lenders delivering it at his door. He is apt, also, to go up to the coppers in the baths,—to plunge the ladle in, amid the cries of the bath-man,—and to souse himself; saying that he has had his bath, and then, as he departs,—'No thanks to you!'

✓ ἀπονοίας ἰς'.

ἡ δὲ ἀπόνοιά ἐστιν ὑπομονή αἰσχροῶν ἔργων τε καὶ λόγων, ὁ δὲ ἀπονενομημένος τοιοῦτός τις οἷος ὁμόσαι ταχὺ, κακῶς ἀκοῦσαι καὶ λοιδορηθῆναι δυνάμενος, τῷ ἤθει ἀγοραῖός τις καὶ ἀνασεσυρμένος καὶ παντοποιός· ἀμέλει δυνατὸς καὶ ὀρχεῖσθαι νήφων τὸν κόρδακα καὶ προσωπεῖον μὴ ἔχων ἐν κωμικῷ χορῷ· καὶ ἐν θαύμασι δὲ τοὺς χαλκοὺς ἐκλέγειν καθ' ἕκαστον παριῶν, καὶ μάχεσθαι τοῖς τὸ σύμβολον φέρουσι καὶ προῖκα θεωρεῖν ἀξιούσι· δεινὸς δὲ καὶ πανδοκεῦσαι καὶ τελωνῆσαι καὶ μηδεμίαν ἐργασίαν αἰσχρὰν ἀποδοκιμάσαι, ἀλλὰ κηρύττειν, μαγειρεῖν, κυβεῖν, τὴν μητέρα μὴ τρέφειν, ἀπάγεσθαι κλοπῆς, τὸ δεσμωτήριον πλείω χρόνον οἰκεῖν ἢ τὴν αὐτοῦ οἰκίαν. καὶ τούτων δ' ἂν εἶναι δόξειε τῶν περιϋσταμένων τοὺς ὄχλους καὶ προσκαλούντων, μεγάλῃ τῇ φωνῇ καὶ παρερῥωγνία λοιδορουμένων καὶ διαλεγομένων πρὸς αὐτούς· καὶ μεταξὺ οἱ μὲν προσίασιν, οἱ δὲ ἀπίασι πρὶν ἀκοῦσαι αὐτοῦ, ἀλλὰ τοῖς μὲν τὴν ἀρχὴν, τοῖς δὲ συλλαβὴν, τοῖς δὲ μέρος τοῦ πράγματος λέγει, οὐκ ἄλλως θεωρεῖσθαι ἀξιῶν τὴν ἀπόνοιαν αὐτοῦ ἢ ὅταν

XVI. THE RECKLESS MAN.

RECKLESSNESS is tolerance of shame in word and deed.

The Reckless man is one who will lightly take an oath, being proof against abuse, and capable of giving it; in character a coarse fellow, defiant of decency, ready to do anything; just the person to dance the cordax, sober and without a mask, in a comic chorus. At a conjuror's performance, too, he will collect the pence, going along from man to man, and wrangling with those who have the free-pass and claim to see the show for nothing. He is apt, also, to become an inn-keeper or a tax-farmer; he will decline no sort of disreputable trade, a crier's, a cook's; he will gamble, and neglect to maintain his mother; he will be arrested for theft, and spend more time in prison than in his own house.

And he would seem, too, to be one of these persons who collect and call crowds about them, ranting in a loud cracked voice and haranguing them; meanwhile some will approach, and others go away without hearing him out; but to some he gives the first chapter of his story, to others an epitome, to others a fragment; and the time which he chooses for ἢ πανήγυρις. ἱκανὸς δὲ καὶ δίκας τὰς μὲν φεύγειν, τὰς δὲ διώκειν, τὰς δὲ ἐξόμνυσθαι, ταῖς δὲ παρεῖναι, ἔχων ἔχινον ἐν τῷ προκολπίῳ καὶ ὄρμαθους γραμματιδίων ἐν ταῖς χερσίν· καὶ οὐκ ἀποδοκιμάζειν δὲ οὐδὲ καπήλων ἀγοραίων στρατηγεῖν, καὶ εὐθὺς τούτοις δανείζειν, καὶ τῆς δραχμῆς τόκον τρία ἡμιωβόλια τῆς ἡμέρας πράττεσθαι, καὶ ἐφοδεύειν τὰ μαγειρεῖα, τὰ ἰχθυοπώλια, τὰ ταριχοπώλια, καὶ τοὺς τόκους ἀπὸ τοῦ ἐμπολήματος εἰς τὴν γνάθον ἐκλέγειν.

[ἐργώδεις δὲ εἰσιν οἱ τὸ στόμα εὐλύτον ἔχοντες εἰς λοιδορίαν καὶ φθεγγόμενοι μεγάλη τῇ φωνῇ, ὡς συνηγεῖν αὐτοῖς τὴν ἀγορὰν καὶ τὰ ἐργαστήρια.]

parading his recklessness is always when there is some public gathering. Great is he, too, in lawsuits, now as defendant, now as prosecutor; sometimes excusing himself on oath, sometimes attending the court with a box of papers in the breast of his cloak and satchels of note-books in his hands. He will not disdain either to be a captain of Marketplace hucksters, but will readily lend them money, exacting, as interest upon ten-pence, two-pence half-penny a day; and will make the round of the cook-shops, the fish-mongers, the fish-picklers, thrusting into his cheek the interest which he levies on their gains.

[These are troublesome persons, for their tongues are easily set wagging abusively; and they talk in so loud a voice that the Marketplace and the workshops resound with them.]

✓ βδελυρίας ιζ'.

οὐ χάλεπὸν δέ ἐστι τὴν βδελυρίαν διορίσασθαι· ἔστι γὰρ παιδιὰ ἐπιφανὴς καὶ ἐπονείδιστος, ὃ δὲ βδελυρὸς τοιοῦτος οἷος ἀπαντήσας γυναιξὶν ἐλευθέραις [ἀσχημονεῖν]· καὶ ἐν θεάτρῳ κροτεῖν ὅταν οἱ ἄλλοι παύωνται, καὶ συρίττειν οὓς ἡδέως θεωροῦσιν οἱ λοιποί· καὶ πληθοῦσης τῆς ἀγορᾶς προσελθὼν πρὸς τὰ κάρνα ἢ τὰ μύρτα ἢ τὰ ἀκρόδρνα ἐστηκὼς τραγηματίζεσθαι, ἅμα τῷ πωλοῦντι προσλαλῶν· καὶ καλέσαι δὲ τῶν παριόντων ὀνομαστί τινα ᾧ μὴ συνήθης ἐστί· καὶ σπεύδοντας δὲ πού ὁρῶν περιμεῖναι κελεύσαι· καὶ ἡττημένῳ δὲ μεγάλην δίκην ἀπιόντι ἀπὸ τοῦ δικαστηρίου προσελθεῖν καὶ συνησθῆναι· καὶ ὀψωνεῖν ἑαυτῷ καὶ αὐλητρίδας μισθοῦσθαι, καὶ δεικνύειν δὲ τοῖς ἀπαντῶσι τὰ ὠφνημένα καὶ παρακαλεῖν ἐπὶ ταῦτα· καὶ διηγεῖσθαι προστὰς πρὸς κουρέιον ἢ μυροπώλιον ὅτι μεθίσκεσθαι μέλλει· καὶ εἰς ὀρνιθοσκόπου τῆς μητρὸς ἐξελθούσης βλασφημῆσαι· καὶ εὐχομένων καὶ σπενδόντων ἐκβαλεῖν τὸ ποτήριον καὶ γελάσαι, ὥσπερ ἀστεῖόν τι πεποιηκώς· καὶ αὐλούμενος δὲ κροτεῖν ταῖς χερσὶ μόνος τῶν ἄλλων καὶ συντερετίζειν καὶ ἐπιτιμᾶν τῇ αὐλητρίδι τί οὐ ταχὺ παύσαιτο· καὶ ἀποπτύσαι δὲ βουλόμενος ὑπὲρ τῆς τραπέζης προσπτύσαι τῷ οἰνοχόῳ.

XVII. THE GROSS MAN.

GROSSNESS is not difficult to define ; it is obtrusive and objectionable pleasantry.

The Gross man is one who will insult freeborn women ; who, in a theatre, will applaud when others cease, and hiss the actors who please the rest of the spectators. When the Marketplace is full, he will go up to the place where nuts or myrtleberries or fruits are sold, and stand munching while he chatters to the seller. Then he will call by name to a passer-by with whom he is not familiar ; or if he chance to see persons in a hurry, he will cry 'stop' ; or he will go up to a man who has lost a great lawsuit and is leaving the court, and will congratulate him. He will do his own marketing, and hire flute-players ; moreover he will show to everyone who meets him the provisions that he has bought, with an invitation to come and eat them ; and will explain, as he stands at the door of a barber's or perfumer's shop, that he means to get drunk. His mother having gone out to the sooth-sayer's, he will use words of evil omen ; or when people are praying and pouring libations, he will drop his cup, and laugh as if he had done something clever. Also, when the flute is being played to him, he alone of all the company will beat time with his hands, and trill an accompaniment ; and will reprove the player, asking why she did not stop sooner. And when he desires to spit, he will spit across the table at the cupbearer.

ἀδολεσχίας ἡ΄.

ἡ δὲ ἀδολεσχία ἐστὶ μὲν διήγησις λόγων μακρῶν καὶ ἀπροβουλευτῶν· ὁ δὲ ἀδολέσχης τοιοῦτός ἐστιν οἷος, ὃν μὴ γινώσκει, τούτῳ παρακαθεζόμενος πλησίον πρῶτον μὲν τῆς αὐτοῦ γυναικὸς εἰπεῖν ἐγκώμιον· εἶτα, ὃ τῆς νυκτὸς εἶδεν ἐνύπνιον, τοῦτο διηγήσασθαι· εἶθ' ὃν εἶχεν ἐπὶ τῷ δείπνῳ τὰ καθ' ἕκαστα διεξελθεῖν· εἶτα δὴ προχωροῦντος τοῦ πράγματος λέγειν ὡς πολὺ πονηρότεροί εἰσιν οἱ νῦν ἄνθρωποι τῶν ἀρχαίων· καὶ ὡς ἄξιοι γεγόνασιν οἱ πυροὶ ἐν τῇ ἀγορᾷ· καὶ ὡς πολλοὶ ἐπιδημοῦσι ξένοι· καὶ τὴν θάλατταν ἐκ Διονυσίων πλούμιον εἶναι· καὶ εἰ ποιήσειεν ὁ Ζεὺς ὕδωρ τὰ ἐν τῇ γῇ βελτίῳ ἔσεσθαι· καὶ ὅτι ἀγρὸν εἰς νέωτα γεωργήσει· καὶ ὡς χαλεπὸν ἐστὶ τὸ ζῆν· καὶ ὡς Δάμιππος μυστηρίους μεγίστην δᾶδα ἔστησε· καὶ πόσοι εἰσὶ κίονες τοῦ Ὀιδείου· καὶ χθὲς ἤμεσα· καὶ τίς ἐστὶν ἡμέρα σήμερον; καὶ ὡς Βοηδρομιῶνος μὲν ἐστὶ τὰ μυστήρια, Πυανεψιώνος δὲ Ἀπατούρια, Ποσειδεῶνος δὲ τὰ κατ' ἀγροὺς Διούσια· κἂν ὑπομένη τις αὐτὸν, μὴ ἀφίστασθαι.

[παρασείσαντα δὴ δεῖ τοὺς τοιούτους τῶν ἀνθρώπων καὶ διαράμενον ἀπαλλάττεσθαι, ὅστις ἀπύρετος βούλεται εἶναι· ἔργον γὰρ συναρκεῖσθαι τοῖς μήτε σπουδὴν μήτε σχολὴν διαγινώσκουσιν.]

XVIII. THE GARRULOUS MAN.

GARRULITY is the discoursing of much and ill-considered talk.

The Garrulous Man is one who will sit down beside a person whom he does not know, and first pronounce a panegyric on his own wife; then relate his dream of last night; then go through in detail what he has had for dinner. Then, warming to the work, he will remark that the men of the present day are greatly inferior to the ancients; and how cheap wheat has become in the market; and what a number of foreigners are in town; and that, if Zeus would send rain, the crops would be better; and that he will work his land next year; and how hard it is to live; and that Damippus set up a very large torch at the Mysteries; and 'How many columns has the Odeum?'; and that yesterday he was unwell; and 'What is the day of the month?'; and that the Mysteries are in Boedromion, the Apaturia in Pyanepsion, the Dionysia in Poseideon. Nor, if he is tolerated, will he ever desist.

[He who would not have a fever must shake off such persons, and thrust them aside, and make his escape. It is hard to bear with those who cannot discern between the time to trifle and the time to work.]

λαλιᾶς ιθ'.

ἡ δὲ λαλιά, εἴ τις αὐτὴν ὀρίζεσθαι βούλοιτο, εἶναι ἂν δόξειεν ἀκρασία τοῦ λόγου, ὃ δὲ λάλος τοιοῦτός τις οἶος τῷ ἐντυγχάνοντι εἰπεῖν, ἂν ὅτιοῦν πρὸς αὐτὸν φθέγξεται, ὅτι οὐδὲν λέγει, καὶ ὅτι αὐτὸς πάντα οἶδε, καὶ ἂν ἀκούῃ αὐτοῦ, μαθήσεται· καὶ μεταξὺ δὲ ἀποκρινόμενῳ ὑποβάλλειν, εἴπας σύ; μὴ ἐπιλάβῃ ὃ μέλλεις λέγειν· καὶ εὖ γε, ὅτι με ὑπέμνησας· καὶ τὸ λαλεῖν ὡς χρήσιμόν πον· καὶ ὃ παρέλιπον· καὶ ταχύ γε συνήκας τὸ πρᾶγμα· καὶ πάλαι σε παρετήρουν εἰ ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ ἐμοὶ κατενεχθήσῃ· καὶ ἑτέρας ἀρχὺς τοιαύτας πορίσασθαι, ὥστε μὴδὲ ἀναπνεῦσαι τὸν ἐντυγχάνοντα. καὶ ὅταν γε τοὺς καθ' ἓνα ἀπογυιώσῃ, δεινὸς καὶ ἐπὶ τοὺς ἀθρόους καὶ συνεστηκότης πορευθῆναι καὶ φυγεῖν ποιῆσαι μεταξὺ χρηματίζοντας· καὶ εἰς τὰ διδασκαλεῖα δὲ καὶ εἰς τὰς παλαιίστρας εἰσιὼν κωλύειν τοὺς παῖδας προμανθάνειν, τοσαῦτα προσλαλῶν τοῖς παιδοτρίβαις καὶ διδασκάλοις. καὶ τοὺς ἀπιέναι φάσκοντας δεινὸς προπέμψαι καὶ ἀποκαταστήσαι εἰς τὴν οἰκίαν· καὶ πυθομένος τὰ τῆς ἐκκλησίας ἀπαγγέλλειν, καὶ προσδιηγῆσασθαι δὲ καὶ τὴν ἐπ' Ἀριστοφάντος ποτε γενομένην

XIX. THE LOQUACIOUS MAN.

LOQUACITY, if one should wish to define it, would seem to be an incontinence of talk.

The Loquacious Man is one who will say to those whom he meets, if they speak a word to him, that they are quite wrong, and that he knows all about it, and that, if they listen to him, they will learn: then while one is answering him, he will put in, 'Do you tell me so?—don't forget what you are going to say': or 'Thanks for reminding me'; or 'How much one gets from a little talk, to be sure!': or 'By-the-bye'—: or 'Yes! you have seen it in a moment': or 'I have been watching you all along to see if you would come to the same conclusion as I did': and other such cues will he make for himself, so that his victim has not even breathing-time. Aye, and when he has prostrated a few lonely stragglers, he is apt to march next upon large, compact bodies, and to rout them in the midst of their occupations. Indeed he will go into the schools and the palastras, and hinder the boys from getting on with their lessons, by chattering at this rate to the trainers and masters. When people say that they are going, he loves to escort them, and to see them safe into their houses. On learning the news from the Ecclesia, he hastens to report it; and to relate, in addition, the old story of the battle in Aristophon.

[τοῦ ῥήτορος] μάχην καὶ τὴν Λακεδαιμονίων ἐπὶ Λυσάνδρου, καὶ οὓς ποτε λόγους αὐτὸς εἶπας εὐδοκίμησεν ἐν τῷ δήμῳ, καὶ κατὰ τῶν πληθῶν γε ἅμα διηγούμενος κατηγορίαν παρεμβαλεῖν, ὥστε τοὺς ἀκούοντας ἦτοι ἐπιλαθέσθαι ἢ νυστάξαι ἢ μεταξὺ καταλιπόντας ἀπαλλάττεσθαι· καὶ συνδικάζων δὲ κωλύσαι κρίναι, καὶ συνθεωρῶν θεάσασθαι, καὶ συνδειπνῶν φαγεῖν, λέγων ὅτι χαλεπὸν τῷ λάλῳ ἐστὶ σιωπᾶν, καὶ ὡς ἐν ὑγρῷ ἐστὶν ἢ γλῶττα, καὶ ὅτι οὐκ ἂν σιωπήσειεν οὐδ' εἰ τῶν χελιδόνων δόξειεν ἂν εἶναι λαλίστερος· καὶ σκωπτόμενος ὑπομῖναι καὶ ὑπὸ τῶν αὐτοῦ παιδίων, ὅταν αὐτὸν ἤδη καθεύδειν βουλόμενα κελεύῃ λέγοντα· πάππα, λάλει τι ἡμῖν, ὅπως ἂν ἡμῶς ὕπνος λάβῃ.

[the orator]'s year, and of the Lacedaemonian victory in Lysander's time; also of the speech for which he himself once got glory in the assembly; and he will throw in some abuse of 'the masses', too, in the course of his narrative; so that the hearers will either forget what it was about, or fall into a doze, or desert him in the middle and make their escape. Then on a jury he will hinder his fellows from coming to a verdict, at a theatre from seeing the play, at a dinner-party, from eating; saying that 'it is hard for a chatterer to be silent', and that this tongue will run, and that he could not hold it though he should be thought a greater chatterer than a swallow. Nay, he will endure to be the butt of his own children, when, drowsy at last, they make their request to him in these terms—'Papa, chatter to us, that we may fall asleep!'

Λογοποιίας κ'.

ἡ δὲ λογοποιία ἐστὶ σύνθεσις ψευδῶν λόγων καὶ πράξεων ὧν βούλεται ὁ λογοποιῶν, ὁ δὲ λογοποιὸς τοιοῦτός τις οἷος ἀπαντήσας τῷ φίλῳ εὐθὺς καταβαλὼν τὸ ἦθος καὶ μειδιάσας ἐρωτῆσαι· πόθεν σύ, καὶ λέγεις τί; τί ἔχεις περὶ τοῦδε εἰπεῖν καινόν; καὶ ἐπιβαλὼν ἐρωτᾷ, μὴ λέγεται τι καινότερον; καὶ μὴν ἀγαθὰ γέ ἐστι τὰ λεγόμενα· καὶ οὐκ ἔάσας ἀποκρίνασθαι εἰπεῖν· τί λέγεις; οὐδὲν ἀκήκοας; δοκῶ μοί σε εὐωχήσειν καινῶν λόγων· καὶ ἔστιν αὐτῷ ἢ στρατιώτης ἢ παῖς Ἀστείου τοῦ αὐλητοῦ ἢ Δύκων ὁ ἐργολάβος παραγεγονώς ἐξ αὐτῆς τῆς μάχης, οὐ φησιν ἀκηκοέναι· αἱ μὲν οὖν ἀναφοραὶ τῶν λόγων τοιαῦτα εἰσιν αὐτοῦ ὧν οὐδεὶς ἂν ἔχοι ἐπιλαβέσθαι· διηγεῖται δὲ, τούτους φάσκων λέγειν, ὡς Πολυσπέρχων καὶ ὁ βασιλεὺς μάχῃ νενίκηκε, καὶ Κάσσανδρος ἐξώγρηται· καὶ ἂν εἴπῃ τις αὐτῷ, σὺ δὲ ταῦτα πιστεύεις; φήσκει, τὸ πρῶγμα βοᾶσθαι γὰρ ἐν τῇ πόλει, καὶ τὸν λόγον ἐπεν-

XX. THE NEWSMAKER.

NEWSMAKING is the framing of fictitious sayings and doings at the pleasure of him who makes news.

The Newsmaker is a person who, when he meets his friend, will assume a demure air, and ask with a smile—‘Where are you from, and what are your tidings? What news have you to give about this affair?’ And then he will reiterate the question—‘Is anything fresh rumoured? Well certainly these are glorious tidings!’ Then, without allowing the other to answer, he will go on—‘What say you? You have heard nothing? I flatter myself that I can treat you to some news’; and he has a soldier, or a slave of Asteius the fluteplayer, or Lycon the contractor, just arrived from the field of battle, from whom he says that he has heard of it. In fact the authorities for his statements are always such that no one can possibly lay hold upon them. Quoting these, he relates how Polysperchon and the king have won the battle, and Cassander has been taken alive; and if anyone says to him, ‘But do you believe this?’—‘Why’, he will answer, ‘the town rings with it!

τείνειν, καὶ πάντας συμφωνεῖν, ταῦτ' αὖ γὰρ λέγειν περὶ τῆς μάχης· καὶ πολλὸν τὸν ζῶμὸν γεγονέναι· εἶναι δὲ αὐτῷ καὶ σημεῖον τὰ πρόσωπα τῶν ἐν τοῖς πράγμασιν· ὁρᾷ γὰρ αὐτῶν πάντων μεταβεβληκότα· λέγει δ' ὥς καὶ παρακῆκοε παρὰ τούτοις κρυπτόμενόν τινα ἐν οἰκίᾳ ἤδη πέμπτην ἡμέραν ἦκοντα ἐκ Μακεδονίας ὃς πάντα ταῦτα οἶδε· καὶ ταῦτα πάντα διεξιὼν, πῶς οἴεσθε; πιθανῶς σχετλιάζει λέγων· δυστυχῆς Κάσσανδρος· ὦ ταλαίπωρος· ἐνθυμεῖ τὸ τῆς τύχης; ἀλλ' οὖν ἰσχυρὸς γε γενόμενος... καὶ δεῖ δ' αὐτὸ σὲ μόνον εἰδέναι· πᾶσι δὲ τοῖς ἐν τῇ πόλει προσδεδράμηκε λέγων.

[τῶν τοιούτων ἀνθρώπων τεθαύμακα τί ποτε βούλονται λογοποιῶντες· οὐ γὰρ μόνον ψεύδονται ἀλλὰ καὶ ἀλυσιτελῶς ἀπαλλάττουσι· πολλάκις γὰρ αὐτῶν οἱ μὲν ἐν τοῖς βαλανείοις περιστάσεις ποιούμενοι τὰ ἰμάτια ἀποβεβλήκασιν, οἱ δ' ἐν τῇ στοᾷ πεζομαχίᾳ καὶ ναυμαχίᾳ νικῶντες ἐρήμους δίκας ὠφλήκασιν· εἰσὶ δ' οἱ καὶ πόλεις τῷ λόγῳ κατὰ κράτος αἰροῦντες παρεδειπνήθησαν. πάντῃ δὲ ταλαίπωρον αὐτῶν ἐστὶ τὸ ἐπιτήδευμα· ποία γὰρ ἐν στοᾷ, ποίῳ δὲ ἐργαστηρίῳ, ποίῳ δὲ μέρει τῆς ἀγορᾶς οὐ διημερεύουσιν ἀπαυδᾶν ποιῶντες τοὺς ἀκούοντας οὕτως καὶ καταπονοῦντες ταῖς ψευδολογίαις;]

The report grows firmer and firmer—everyone is agreed—they all give the same account of the battle': adding that the hash has been dreadful; and that he can tell it, too, from the faces of the Government—he observes that they have all changed countenance. He speaks also of having heard privately that the authorities have a man hid in a house who came just five days ago from Macedonia, and who knows it all. And in narrating all this—only think!—he will be plausibly pathetic, saying 'Unlucky Cassander! Poor fellow! Do you see what fortune is? Well, well, he was a strong man once...': adding 'No one but you must know this'—when he has run up to everybody in town with the news.

[It is a standing puzzle to me what object such men can have in their inventions; for, besides telling falsehoods, they incur positive loss. Often have cloaks been lost by those of them who draw groups round them at the baths; often has judgment gone by default against those who were winning battles or seafights in the Porch; and some there are who, while mounting the imaginary breach, have missed their dinner. What porch is there, what workshop, what part of the Marketplace which they do not haunt all day long, exhausting the patience of their hearers in this way, and wearying them to death with their fictions?]

κακολογίας κα'.

ἔστι δὲ ἡ κακολογία ἀγωγή τῆς ψυχῆς εἰς τὸ χεῖρον ἐν λόγοις, ὃ δὲ κακολόγος τοιόσδε τις οἶος ἐρωτηθεὶς, ὃ δεῖνα τίς ἐστιν; εἰπεῖν καθάπερ οἱ γεγεαλογοῦντες· πρῶτον ἀπὸ τοῦ γένους αὐτοῦ ἄρξομαι. τούτου ὁ μὲν πατήρ ἐξ ἀρχῆς Σωσίας ἐκαλεῖτο, ἐγένετο δ' ἐν τοῖς στρατιώταις Σωσίστρατος· ἐπειδὴ δὲ εἰς τοὺς δημότας ἐνεγράφη, Σωσίδημος· ἡ μέντοι μήτηρ εὐγενὴς Θραττά ἐστὶ καλεῖται γοῦν ἡ ψυχὴ [Κορινθιακῶς]· τὰς δὲ τοιαύτας φασὶν ἐν τῇ πατρίδι εὐγενεῖς εἶναι· αὐτὸς δὲ οὗτος, ὡς ἐκ τοιούτων γεγονὼς, κακὸς καὶ μαστιγίας. καὶ ἱκανὸς δὲ πρὸς τινα εἰπεῖν· ἐγὼ δήπου τὰ τοιαῦτα οἶδα, ὑπὲρ ὧν οὐ πλανᾷ πρὸς ἐμέ καὶ τούτους διεξιὼν· αὐταὶ αἱ γυναῖκες ἐκ τῆς ὁδοῦ τοὺς παριόντας συναρπάζουσι· καὶ οἰκία τις αὕτη τὰ σκέλη ἥρκυα· οὐ γὰρ οὖν λῆρός ἐστι τὸ λεγόμενον, ἀλλ' ὥσπερ κύνες αἱ γυναῖκες ἐν ταῖς ὁδοῖς συνέρχονται· καὶ τὸ ὅλον ἀνδρολάλοι τινές, καὶ αὐταὶ ἐπὶ θύραν τὴν αὐλειον ὑπακούουσι. ἀμέλει δὲ καὶ

XXI. THE EVIL-SPEAKER.

THE habit of Evil-speaking is a bent of the mind towards putting things in the worst light.

The Evil-speaker is one who, when asked who so-and-so is, will reply, in the style of genealogists, 'I will begin with his parentage. This person's father was originally called Sosias; in the ranks he came to rank as Sosistratus; and, when he was enrolled in his deme, as Sosidemus. His mother, I may add, is a noble damsel of Thrace—at least she is called 'my life' in the language of Corinth—and they say that such ladies are esteemed noble in their own country. Our friend himself, as might be expected from his parentage, is—a rascally scoundrel'. He is very fond, also, of saying to one: 'Of course—I understand that sort of thing; you do not err in your way of describing it to our friends and me. These women snatch the passers-by out of the very street...That is a house which has not the best of characters...Really there is something' in that proverb about the women...In short, they have a trick of gossiping with men,—and they answer the hall-door themselves'.

It is just like him, too, when others are speaking evil, to κακῶς λεγόντων ἐτέρων συνεπιλαμβάνεσθαι εἰπών· ἐγὰ δὲ τοῦτον τὸν ἄνθρωπον πλεον πάντων μεμίσηκα· καὶ γὰρ εἰδεχθῆς τις ἀπὸ τοῦ προσώπου ἐστίν, ἡ δὲ ποιηρία οὐδενὶ ὁμοία· σημείον δέ· τῇ γὰρ αὐτοῦ γυναικὶ τάλαντα εἰσενεγκαμένη προῖκα ἔξ, ἔξ ἧς παιδίον αὐτῷ γέγονε, τρεῖς χαλκοὺς εἰς ὄψον δίδωσι, καὶ τῷ ψυχρῷ λούεσθαι ἀναγκάζει τῇ τοῦ Ποσειδῶνος ἡμέρᾳ· καὶ συγκαθήμενος δεινὸς περὶ τοῦ ἀναστάντος εἰπεῖν, καὶ ἀρχὴν γε εἰληφῶς μὴ ἀποσχέσθαι μηδὲ τοὺς οἰκείους αὐτοῦ λοιδορῆσαι· καὶ πλεῖστα περὶ τῶν φίλων καὶ οἰκείων κακὰ εἰπεῖν καὶ περὶ τῶν τετελευτηκότων, κακῶς λέγειν ἀποκαλῶν παρρησίαν καὶ δημοκρατίαν καὶ ἐλευθερίαν καὶ τῶν ἐν τῷ βίῳ ἥδιστα τοῦτο ποιῶν.

[οὕτως ὁ τῆς δυσκολίας ἐρεθισμὸς μανικοὺς καὶ ἐξεστηκότας ἀνθρώπους τοῖς ἡθεσι ποιεῖ.]

join in:—‘And I hate that man above all men. He looks a scoundrel—it is written on his face: and his baseness—it defies description. Here is a proof—he allows his wife, who brought him six talents of dowry and has borne him a child, three farthings for the luxuries of the table; and makes her wash with cold water on Poseidon’s day’. When he is sitting with others he loves to criticise one who has just left the circle; nay, if he has found an occasion, he will not abstain from abusing his own relations. Indeed he will say all manner of injurious things of his friends and relatives, and of the dead; misnaming slander ‘plain speaking’, ‘republican candour’, ‘independence’, and making it the chief pleasure of his life.

[Thus can the sting of ill temper produce in men the character of insanity and frenzy.]

μεμψιμοιρίας κβ'.

ἔστιν ἡ μεμψιμοιρία ἐπιτίμησις παρὰ τὸ προσῆκον τῶν δεδομένων, ὃ δὲ μεμψίμοιρος τοιόσδε τις οἶος ἀπαστείλαντος μερίδα τοῦ φίλου εἰπεῖν πρὸς τὸν φέροντα· ἐφθόνησάς μοι τοῦ ζωμοῦ καὶ τοῦ οἰναρίου, οὐκ ἐπὶ δεῖπνον καλέσας. καὶ τῷ Διὶ ἀγανακτεῖν, οὐ διότι οὐχ ἔχει, ἀλλὰ διότι ὕστερον· καὶ εὐρῶν ἐν τῇ ὁδῷ βαλλάντιον εἰπεῖν· ἀλλ' οὐ θησαυρὸν εὔρηκα οὐδέποτε· καὶ πριάμενος ἀνδράποδον ἄξιον καὶ πολλὰ δεηθεὶς τοῦ πωλοῦντος, θαυμάζω, εἰπεῖν, εἴ τι ὑγιὲς οὕτω ἄξιον ἐώνημαι· καὶ πρὸς τὸν εὐαγγελιζόμενον ὅτι υἱός σοι γέγονεν, εἰπεῖν ὅτι ἂν προσθῇς καὶ τῆς οὐσίας τὸ ἥμισυ ἄπεστιν, ἀληθῆ ἔρεῖς· καὶ δίκην νικήσας καὶ λαβὼν πάσας τὰς ψήφους ἐγκαλεῖν τῷ γράψαντι τὸν λόγον ὥς πολλὰ παραλελοιπότι τῶν δικαίων· καὶ ἐράνου εἰσενεχθέντος παρὰ τῶν φίλων καὶ φήσαντός τινος, ἱλαρὸς ἴσθι, καὶ πῶς; εἰπεῖν· ὅτε δεῖ τὰργύριον ἀποδοῦναι ἐκάστῳ καὶ χωρὶς τούτων χάριν ὀφείλειν ὥς εὐηργετημένον;

XXII. THE GRUMBLER.

GRUMBLING is undue censure of one's portion.

The Grumbler is one who, when his friend has sent him a present from his table, will say to the bearer, 'You grudged me my soup and my poor wine, or you would have asked me to dinner'. He will be annoyed with Zeus, not for not raining, but for raining too late; and, if he finds a purse on the road, 'Ah', he will say, 'but I have never found a treasure!'. When he has bought a slave cheap after much coaxing of the seller, 'It is strange', he will remark, 'if I have got a sound lot such a bargain'. To one who brings him the good news, 'A son is born to you', he will reply, 'If you add that I have lost half my property, you will speak the truth'. When he has won a lawsuit by a unanimous verdict, he will find fault with the composer of his speech for having left out several of the points in his case. If a subscription has been raised for him by his friends, and someone says to him 'Cheer up!'—'Cheer up?' he will answer; 'when I have to refund his money to every man, and to be grateful besides, as if I had been done a service!'

ἀπιστίας κγ'.

ἔστιν ἀμέλει ἀπιστία ὑπόληψις τις ἀδικίας κατὰ πάντων, ὃ δὲ ἀπιστος τοιοῦτός τις ὅλος ἀποστείλας τὸν παῖδα ὀφωνήσοντα ἕτερον παῖδα πέμπειν πευσόμενον πόσου ἐπρίατο· καὶ φέρειν αὐτὸς τὸ ἀργύριον καὶ κατὰ στάδιον καθίζων ἀριθμεῖν πόσον ἐστί· καὶ τὴν γυναῖκα τὴν αὐτοῦ ἐρωτᾶν κατακείμενος εἰ κέκλεικε τὴν κιβωτὸν καὶ εἰ σεσήμανται τὸ κυλικούχιον καὶ εἰ ὁ μοχλὸς εἰς τὴν θύραν τὴν αὐλείαν ἐμβέβληται, καὶ ἂν ἐκείνη φῇ, μηδὲν ἦττον αὐτὸς ἀναστὰς γυμνὸς ἐκ τῶν στρωμάτων καὶ ἀνυπόδητος τὸν λύχνον ἄψας ταῦτα πάντα περιδραμὼν ἐπισκέψασθαι καὶ οὕτω μόλις ὕπνου τυγχάνειν· καὶ τοὺς ὀφείλοντας αὐτῷ ἀργύριον μετὰ μαρτύρων ἀπαιτεῖν τοὺς τόκους ὅπως μὴ δύνωνται ἔξαρνοι γενέσθαι· καὶ τὸ ἱμάτιον δὲ ἐκδοῦναι δεινός, οὐχ ὃς βέλτιστα ἐργάσεται, ἀλλ' ὅταν ᾖ ἄξιος ἐγγυητῆς τοῦ κναφέως· καὶ ὅταν ἦκη τις αἰτησόμενος ἐκπώματα, μάλιστα μὲν μὴ δοῦναι, ἂν δ' ἄρα τις οἰκεῖος ἢ καὶ ἀναγκαῖος, μόνον οὐ πυρώσας καὶ στήσας καὶ σχεδὸν ἐγγυητὴν λαβὼν χρῆσαι· καὶ τὸν παῖδα δὲ ἀκολουθοῦντα κελεύειν αὐτοῦ ὀπισθεν μὴ βαδίζειν ἀλλ' ἔμπροσθεν, ἵνα φυλάττηται αὐτὸν μὴ ἐν τῇ ὁδῷ ἀποδράσῃ· καὶ τοῖς εἰληφόσι τι παρ' αὐτοῦ καὶ λέγουσι, πόσου; κατάθου· οὐ γὰρ σχολάζω πω πέμπειν, εἰπεῖν· μηδὲν πραγματεύου· ἐγὼ γὰρ, ἂν σὺ μὴ σχολάσῃς, συνακολουθήσω.

XXIII. THE DISTRUSTFUL MAN.

DISTRUSTFULNESS is a presumption that all men are unjust.

The Distrustful man is one who, having sent his slave to market, will send another to ascertain what price he gave. He will carry his money himself, and sit down every two-hundred yards to count it. He will ask his wife in bed if she has locked the wardrobe, and if the cupboard has been sealed, and the bolt put upon the hall-door; and if the reply is 'Yes,' not the less will he forsake the blankets and run about shoeless to inspect all these matters, and barely thus find sleep. He will demand his interest from his creditors in the presence of witnesses, to prevent the possibility of their repudiating the debt. He is apt also to send his cloak to be cleaned, not to the best workman, but wherever he finds sterling security for the fuller. When anyone comes to ask the loan of cups he will, if possible, refuse; but if perchance it is an intimate friend or a relation, he will almost assay the cups in the fire, and weigh them, and do everything but take security, before he lends them. Also he will order his slave, when he attends him, to walk in front and not behind, as a precaution against his running away in the street. To persons who have bought something of him and say, 'How much is it? Enter it in your books, for I am too busy to send the money yet,'—he will reply; 'Do not trouble yourself; if you are not at leisure, I will accompany you.'

μικρολογίας κδ.

ἡ δὲ μικρολογία ἐστὶ φειδωλία τοῦ διαφόρου ὑπὲρ τὸν καιρὸν, ὁ δὲ μικρολόγος τοιοῦτός τις οἶος ἐν τῷ μηνὶ ἡμιωβόλιον ἀπαιτεῖν ἔλθων ἐπὶ τὴν οἰκίαν· καὶ συσσιτῶν ἀριθμεῖν τὰς κύλικας, πόσας ἕκαστος πέπωκε, καὶ ἀπάρχεσθαι ἐλάχιστον τῇ Ἀρτέμιδι τῶν συνδειπνούντων· καὶ ὅσα μικροῦ τις πριάμενος λογίζεται πάντα φάσκειν εἶναι ἄγαν· καὶ οἰκέτου χύτραν ἢ λοπάδα κατάξαντος εἰσπρᾶξαι ἀπὸ τῶν ἐπιτηδεύων· καὶ τῆς γυναικὸς ἐκβαλούσης τρίχαλκον οἶος μεταφέρειν τὰ σκεύη καὶ τὰς κλῖνας καὶ τὰς κιβωτοὺς καὶ διφᾶν τὰ καλύμματα· καὶ ἐάν τι πωλῇ, τοσούτου ἀποδόσθαι ὥστε μὴ λυσιτελεῖν τῷ πριαμένῳ· καὶ οὐκ ἂν εἶσαι οὔτε συκοτραγῆσαι ἐκ τοῦ αὐτοῦ κήπου οὔτε διὰ τοῦ αὐτοῦ ἀγροῦ πορευθῆναι οὔτε ἐλάαν ἢ φοίνικα τῶν χαμαὶ κειμένων ἀνελέσθαι· καὶ τοὺς ὄρους δὲ ἐπισκοπεῖσθαι ὁσημέραι εἰ διαμένουσιν οἱ αὐτοί. δεινὸς δὲ καὶ ὑπερῆμερίαν πρᾶξαι καὶ τόκου τόκου ἀπαιτῆσαι· καὶ ἐστιῶν τοὺς δημότας μικρὰ τὰ κρέα κόψας παραθεῖναι· καὶ ὀψωνῶν μηδὲν πριάμενος εἰσελ-

XXIV. THE PENURIOUS MAN.

PENURIOUSNESS is too strict attention to profit and loss.

The Penurious man is one who, while the month is current, will come to one's house and ask for a half-obol. When he is at table with others he will count how many cups each of them has drunk; and will pour a smaller libation to Artemis than any of the company. Whenever a person has made a good bargain for him and charges him with it, he will say that it is too dear. When a servant has broken a jug or a plate he will take the value out of his rations; or, if his wife has dropped a three-farthing piece, he is capable of moving the furniture and the sofas and the wardrobes, and of rummaging in the curtains. If he has anything to sell he will dispose of it at such a price that the buyer shall have no profit. He is not likely to let one eat a fig from his garden, or walk through his land, or pick up one of the olives or dates that lie on the ground; and he will inspect his boundaries day by day to see if they remain the same. He is apt, also, to enforce the right of distraining, and to exact compound interest. When he feasts the men of his parish, the cutlets set before them will be small: when he markets, he will come in having bought nothing.

θεῖν· καὶ ἀπαγορεύσαι τῇ γυναικὶ μήτε ἄλας χρῆσαι μήτε ἐλλύχνιον μήτε κύμινον μήτε ὀρίγανον μήτε οὐλὰς μήτε στέμματα μήτε θυλήματα, ἀλλὰ λέγειν ὅτι τὰ μικρὰ ταῦτα πολλά ἐστὶ τοῦ ἐνιαυτοῦ. καὶ τὸ ὅλον δὲ τῶν μι-κρολόγων καὶ τὰς ἀργυροθήκας ἔστιν ἰδεῖν εὐρωτιώσας καὶ κλεῖς ἰωμένας, καὶ αὐτοὺς δὲ φοροῦντας ἐλάττω τῶν μηρῶν τὰ ἱμάτια, καὶ ἐκ ληκυθίων μικρῶν πάνυ ἀλειφομένους, καὶ ἐν χρῶ κειρομένους, καὶ τὸ μέσον τῆς ἡμέρας ὑπολυομένους, καὶ πρὸς τοὺς γναφεῖς διατεινομένους ὅπως τὸ ἱμάτιον αὐτοῖς ἔξει πολλὴν γῆν ἵνα μὴ ῥυπαίνεται ταχύ.

And he will forbid his wife to lend salt, or a lamp-wick, or cummin, or verjuice, or meal for sacrifice, or garlands, or cakes; saying that these trifles come to much in the year. Then in general it may be noticed that the moneyboxes of the penurious are mouldy, and the keys rusty; that they themselves wear their cloaks scarcely reaching to the thigh; that they anoint themselves from very small oil-flasks; that they have their hair cut close; that they take off their shoes in the middle of the day; and that they are urgent with the fuller to let their cloak have plenty of earth, in order that it may not soon be soiled.

ἀνελευθερίας κέ'.

ἡ δὲ ἀνελευθερία ἐστὶ περιουσία τις ἀφιλοτιμίας ἐς δαπάνην ἔχουσα, ὃ δὲ ἀνελεύθερος τοιοῦτός τις οἶος νικήσας τραγωδοῖς ταινίαν ξυλὴν ἀναθεῖναι τῷ Διονύσῳ, ἐπυγραψάμενος αὐτοῦ τὸ ὄνομα· καὶ ἐπιδόσεων γινομένων ἐκ τοῦ δήμου ἀναστὰς σιωπῇ ἐκ τοῦ μέσου ἀπελθεῖν· καὶ ἐκδιδούς αὐτοῦ θυγατέρα τοῦ μὲν ἱερείου πλὴν τῶν ἱερωσύνων τὰ κρέα ἀποδόσθαι, τοὺς δὲ διάκονοῦντας ἐν τοῖς γάμοις οἰκοσίτους μισθώσασθαι· καὶ τριηραρχῶν τὰ τοῦ κυβερνήτου στρώματα αὐτῷ ἐπὶ τοῦ καταστρώματος ὑποστορέννυσθαι, τὰ δὲ αὐτοῦ ἀποτιθέναι· καὶ τὰ παιδία δὲ δεινὸς μὴ πέμψαι εἰς διδασκάλου, ὅταν ἢ Μουσεῖα, ἀλλὰ φῆσαι κακῶς ἔχειν, ἵνα μὴ συμβάλονται· καὶ ἐξ ἀγορᾶς δὲ ὠψωνήσας τὰ κρέα αὐτὸς φέρειν καὶ τὰ λάχανα ἐν τῷ προκολπίῳ· καὶ ἔνδον μένειν ὅταν ἐκδῶ θοιμάτιον

XXV. THE MEAN MAN.

MEANNESS is an excessive indifference to honour where expense is concerned.

The Mean man is one who, when he has gained the prize in a tragic contest, will dedicate a wooden scroll to Dionysus, having had it inscribed with his own name. When subscriptions for the treasury are being made, he will rise in silence from his place in the Ecclesia, and go out from the midst. When he is celebrating his daughter's marriage he will sell the flesh of the animal sacrificed, except the parts due to the priest; and will hire the attendants at the marriage festival on condition that they find their own board. When he is trierarch he will spread the steersman's rugs under him on the deck, and put his own away. He is apt, also, not to send his children to school when there is a festival of the Muses, but to say that they are unwell, in order that they may not contribute. Again, when he has bought provisions, he will himself carry the meat and the vegetables from the marketplace in the bosom of his cloak. When he has sent his cloak to be scoured he will keep the house. If a friend is raising a subscription, and has spoken to him about it, he will turn out of the street when he descries him approaching, and will go home by a roundabout way. Then he will not buy a maid for his wife, though she brought him a dower; but will hire from the Women's Market the girl who is to attend her on the occasions when she goes out. He will wear his shoes patched with cobbler's work, and say that it is as strong as horn. He will sweep out his house when he gets up, and polish the sofas; and in sitting down he will twist aside the coarse cloak which he wears himself.

ν ἐκπλῦναι· καὶ φίλον ἔρανον συλλέγοντος καὶ διειλεγμένου αὐτῷ προσιόντα προιδόμενος ἀποκάμψας ἐκ τῆς ὁδοῦ τὴν κύκλῳ οἴκαδε πορευθῆναι· καὶ τῇ γυναικὶ δὲ τῇ ἑαυτοῦ προῖκα εἰσενεγκαμένη μὴ πρίασθαι θεράπαιναν, ἀλλὰ μισθοῦσθαι εἰς τὰς ἐξόδους ἐκ τῆς γυναικείας παιδίον τὸ συνακολουθήσον· καὶ τὰ ὑποδήματα παλμπήξει κεκαττυμένα φορεῖν καὶ λέγειν ὅτι κέρατος οὐδὲν διαφέρει· καὶ ἀναστὰς τὴν οἰκίαν ἐκκορήσαι καὶ τὰς κλῖνας καλλῦναι· καὶ καθεζόμενος παραστρέψαι τὸν τρίβωνα ὃν αὐτὸς φορεῖ.

αἰσχροκερδείας κς'.

ἡ δὲ αἰσχροκέρδειά ἐστι περιουσία κέρδους αἰσχροῦ· ἔστι δὲ τοιοῦτος ὁ αἰσχροκερδὴς οἷος ἐστιῶν ἄρτους ἱκανοὺς μὴ παραθεῖναι· καὶ δανείσασθαι παρὰ ξένου παρ' αὐτῷ καταλόντος· καὶ διανεμὼν μερίδας φῆσαι δίκαιον εἶναι διμοιρίαν τῷ διανεμόντι δίδοσθαι καὶ εὐθὺς αὐτῷ νεῖμαι· καὶ οἶνοπωλῶν κεκραμένον τὸν οἶνον τῷ φίλῳ ἀποδόσθαι· καὶ ἐπὶ θέαν τηνικαῦτα πορεύεσθαι ἄγων τοὺς υἱεῖς ἥνικα προῖκα ἐφιαῖσιν οἱ θεατρῶναι· καὶ ἀποδημῶν δημοσίᾳ τὸ μὲν ἐκ τῆς πόλεως ἐφόδιον οἶκοι καταλιπεῖν, παρὰ δὲ τῶν συμπρεσβευόντων δανείσασθαι· καὶ τῷ ἀκολουθεῖ μείζον φορτίον ἐπιθεῖναι ἢ δύναται φέρειν καὶ ἐλάχιστα ἐπιτήδεια τῶν ἄλλων παρέχειν· καὶ ξενίων δὲ μέρος τὸ αὐτοῦ ἀπαιτήσας ἀποδόσθαι· καὶ ἀλειφόμενος ἐν τῷ βαλανείῳ εἰπῶν, σαπρόν γε τὸ ἔλαιον ἐπρίω, τῷ παιδαρίῳ, τῷ ἄλλοτρίῳ ἀλείφεσθαι. καὶ τῶν εὐρίσκομένων χαλκῶν ὑπὸ τῶν οἰκετῶν ἐν ταῖς ὁδοῖς δεινὸς ἀπαιτῆσαι τὸ μέρος, κοινὸν εἶναι φήσας τὸν Ἑρμῆν· καὶ ἱμάτιον ἐκδοῦναι πλῦναι καὶ χρυσάμενος παρὰ γνωρίμου ἐφελκύσαι πλείους ἡμέρας, ἕως ἂν ἀπαιτηθῇ· καὶ τὰ τοιαῦτα· Φειδωνίῳ μέτρῳ τὸν πύνδακα ἐγκεκρουμένῳ μετρεῖν

XXVI. THE AVARICIOUS MAN.

AVARICE is excessive desire of base gain.

The Avaricious man is one who, when he entertains, will not set enough bread upon the table. He will borrow from a guest staying in his house. When he makes a distribution he will say that the distributor is entitled to a double share, and thereupon will help himself. When he sells wine he will sell it watered to his own friend. He will seize the opportunity of taking his boys to the play when the lessees of the theatre grant free admission. If he travels on the public service, he will leave at home the money allowed to him by the State, and will borrow of his colleagues in the embassy; he will load his servant with more baggage than he can carry, and give him shorter rations than any other master does; he will demand, too, his strict share of the presents,—and sell it. When he is anointing himself at the bath he will say to the slave-boy, ‘Why, this oil that you have bought is rancid’—and will use someone else’s. He is apt to claim his part of the halfpence found by his servants in the streets, and to cry ‘Shares in the luck!’ Having sent his cloak to be scoured he will borrow another from an acquaintance, and delay to restore it for several days, until it is demanded back.

These, again, are traits of his. He will weigh out their rations to his household with his own hands, using ‘the αὐτὸς τοῖς ἔνδον, σφόδρα ἀποψῶν, τὰ ἐπιτήδεια· καὶ ὑποπρίασθαι φίλου δοκοῦντος πρὸς τρόπου πωλεῖν, καὶ ἐπιβαλὼν ἀποδόσθαι· ἀμέλει δὲ καὶ χρέος ἀποδιδούς τριάκοντα μνῶν ἔλαττον τέτταρσι δραχμαῖς ἀποδοῦναι· καὶ τῶν υἱῶν δὲ μὴ πορευομένων εἰς τὸ διδασκαλεῖον τὸν μῆνα ὅλον διὰ τὴν ἀρρώστιαν ἀφαιρεῖν τοῦ μισθοῦ κατὰ λόγον· καὶ τὸν Ἀνθεστηριῶνα μῆνα μὴ πέμπειν αὐτοὺς εἰς τὰ μαθήματα διὰ τὸ θέας εἶναι πολλὰς, ἵνα μὴ τὸν μισθὸν ἐκτίνῃ καὶ παρὰ παιδὸς κομιζόμενος ἀποφορὰν τοῦ χαλκοῦ τὴν ἐπικαταλλαγὴν προσαιτεῖν καὶ λογισμὸν δὲ λαμβάνων παρὰ τοῦ χειρίζοντος * * *· καὶ φράτορας ἐστιῶν αἰτεῖν τοῖς ἑαυτοῦ παισὶν ἐκ τοῦ κοινοῦ ὄψον, τὰ δὲ καταλειπόμενα ἀπὸ τῆς τραπέζης ῥαφανίδων ἡμίσεα ἀπογράφεσθαι, ἵνα οἱ διακονοῦντες παῖδες μὴ λάβωσι· καὶ συναποδημῶν δὲ μετὰ γνωρίμων χρήσασθαι τοῖς ἐκείνων παισὶ, τὸν δὲ ἑαυτοῦ ἔξω μισθῶσαι καὶ μὴ ἀναφέρειν εἰς τὸ κοινὸν τὸν μισθόν. ἀμέλει δὲ καὶ συναγόντων παρ' αὐτῷ ἀποθεῖναι τῶν διδομένων ξύλων καὶ φακῶν καὶ ὄξους καὶ ἁλῶν καὶ ἐλαίου τοῦ εἰς τὸν λύχνον· καὶ γαμοῦντός τινος τῶν φίλων καὶ ἐκδιδομένου θυγατέρα πρὸ χρόνου τινὸς ἀποδημήσαι, ἵνα μὴ πέμψῃ προσφορὰν· καὶ παρὰ τῶν γνωρίμων τοιαῦτα κίχρασθαι ἢ μῆτ' ἂν ἀπαιτήσαι μῆτ' ἂν ἀποδιδόντων ταχέως ἢ τις κομίσαιτο.

measure of the frugal king,' with the bottom dented inward, and carefully brushing the rim. He will buy a thing privately when a friend seems ready to sell it on reasonable terms, and will dispose of it at a raised price. It is just like him, too, when he is paying a debt of thirty minas, to withhold four drachmas. Then if his sons, through ill-health, do not attend the school throughout the month, he will make a proportionate deduction from the payment; and all through Anthesterion he will not send them to their lessons because there are so many festivals, and he does not wish to pay the fees. When he is receiving rent from a slave he will demand in addition the discount charged on the copper money; also in going through the accounts of his manager [he will challenge small items]. Entertaining his clansmen, he will beg a dish from the common table for his own servants; and will register the half-radishes left over from the repast, in order that the attendants may not get them. Again, when he travels with acquaintances he will make use of their servants, but will let his own slave out for hire; nor will he place the proceeds to the common account. It is just like him, too, when a club-dinner is held at his house, to secrete some of the firewood, lentils, vinegar, salt, and lamp-oil placed at his disposal. If a friend, or a friend's daughter, is to be married, he will go abroad a little while before, in order to avoid giving a wedding present. And he will borrow from his acquaintances things of a kind that no one would ask back,—or readily take back, if it were proposed to restore them.

δειλίας κζ'.

ἀμέλει δὲ ἡ δειλία δόξειεν ἂν εἶναι ὑπείξίς τις ψυχῆς ἔμφοβος, ὃ δὲ δειλὸς τοιοῦτός τις ὅλος πλέων τὰς ἄκρας φάσκειν ἡμιολίας εἶναι· καὶ κλύδωνος γενομένου ἐρωτᾶν εἴ τις μὴ μεμίνηται τῶν πλεόντων· καὶ τοῦ κυβερνήτου † ἀνακύπτων [μὲν] † πυνθάνεσθαι εἰ μεσοπορεῖ καὶ τί αὐτῷ δοκεῖ τὰ τοῦ θεοῦ· καὶ πρὸς τὸν παρακαθήμενον λέγειν ὅτι φοβεῖται ἀπὸ ἐνυπνίου τινός· καὶ ἐκδὺς διδόναι τῷ παιδί τὸν χιτωνίσκον, καὶ δεῖσθαι πρὸς τὴν γῆν προσά-γειν αὐτόν· καὶ στρατενόμενος δὲ πεζῇ τοὺς ἐκβοηθοῦντάς τε προσκαλεῖν κελεύων πρὸς αὐτὸν στάντας πρῶτον περιδεῖν, καὶ λέγειν ὡς ἔργον διαγινῶναί ἐστι πότεροί εἰσιν οἱ πολέμιοι· καὶ ἀκούων κραυγῆς καὶ ὀρῶν πίπτοντας εἰπὼν πρὸς τοὺς παρεστηκότας ὅτι τὴν σπάθην λαβεῖν ὑπὸ τῆς σπουδῆς ἐπελάθετο, τρέχειν ἐπὶ τὴν σκηνήν· καὶ τὸν παῖδα ἐκπέμψας καὶ κελεύσας προσκοπεῖσθαι, ποῦ εἰσιν οἱ πολέμιοι, ἀποκρίνῃαι αὐτὴν ὑπὸ τὸ προσ-

XXVII. THE COWARD.

COWARDICE would seem to be, in fact, a shrinking of the soul through fear.

The Coward is one who, on a voyage, will protest that the promontories are privateers; and, if a high sea gets up, will ask if there is any one on board who has not been initiated. He will put up his head and ask the steersman if he is half-way, and what he thinks of the face of the heavens; remarking to the person sitting next him that a certain dream makes him feel uneasy; and he will take off his tunic and give it to his slave; or he will beg them to put him ashore.

On land also, when he is campaigning, he will call to him those who are going out to the rescue, and bid them come and stand by him and look about them first; saying that it is hard to make out which is the enemy. Hearing shouts and seeing men falling, he will remark to those who stand by him that he has forgotten in his haste to bring his sword, and will run to the tent; where, having sent his slave out to reconnoitre the position of the enemy, he will hide κεφάλαιον· εἴτα διατρίβειν πολλὸν χρόνον ὡς ζητῶν ἐν τῇ σκηνῇ· καὶ ὁρῶν τραυματίαν τινὰ προσφερόμενον τῶν φίλων προσδραμὼν καὶ θαρρῆϊν κελεύσας ὑπολαβὼν φέρειν· καὶ τοῦτον θεραπεύειν καὶ περισπογγίζειν καὶ παρακαθήμενος ἀπὸ τοῦ ἔλκουσ τὰς μύϊας σοβεῖν, καὶ πᾶν μᾶλλον ἢ μάχεσθαι τοῖς πολεμίοις· καὶ τοῦ σαλπιστοῦ δὲ τὸ πολεμικὸν σημήναντος καθήμενος ἐν τῇ σκηνῇ [εἰπεῖν]· ἄπαγ' ἐς κόρακας· οὐκ ἐάσει τὸν ἄνθρωπον ὕπνου λαβεῖν πυκνὰ σημαίνων· καὶ αἵματος δὲ ἀνάπλεως ἀπὸ τοῦ ἀλλοτρίου τραύματος ἐντυγχάνειν τοῖς ἐκ τῆς μάχης ἐπανιοῦσι καὶ διηγείσθαι ὡς κινδυνεύσας ἓνα σέσωκα τῶν φίλων· καὶ εἰσάγειν πρὸς τὸν κατακείμενον σκεψομένους τοὺς δημότας, τοὺς φυλέτας, καὶ τούτων ἅμα ἐκάστω διηγείσθαι ὡς αὐτὸς αὐτὸν ταῖς αὐτοῦ χερσὶν ἐπὶ σκηνὴν ἐκόμισεν.

the sword under his pillow, and then spend a long time in pretending to look for it. And seeing from the tent a wounded comrade being carried in, he will run towards him and cry 'Cheer up!'; he will take him into his arms and carry him; he will tend and sponge him; he will sit by him and keep the flies off his wound—in short he will do anything rather than fight with the enemy. Again, when the trumpeter has sounded the signal for battle, he will cry, as he sits in the tent, 'Bother! you will not allow the man to get a wink of sleep with your perpetual bugling!' Then, covered with blood from the other's wound, he will meet those who are returning from the fight, and announce to them, 'I have run some risk to save one of our fellows;' and he will bring in the men of his parish and of his tribe to see his patient, at the same time explaining to each of them that he carried him with his own hands to the tent.

δεισιδαιμονίας κή.

ἀμέλει ἡ δεισιδαιμονία δόξειεν ἂν εἶναι δειλία πρὸς τὸ δαιμόνιον, ὃ δὲ δεισιδαίμων τοιοῦτός τις οἶος ἐπὶ κρήνη ἀπονιψάμενος τὰς χεῖρας καὶ περιβράχμενος ἀπὸ ἱεροῦ δάφνην εἰς τὸ στόμα λαβὼν οὕτω τὴν ἡμέραν περιπα-τεῖν· καὶ τὴν ὁδὸν ἐὰν ὑπερδράμῃ γαλῆ, μὴ πρότερον πορευθῆναι ἕως διεξέλθῃ τις, ἢ λίθους τρεῖς ὑπὲρ τῆς ὁδοῦ διαβάλλῃ· καὶ ἐὰν ἴδῃ ὄφιν ἐν τῇ οἰκίᾳ, ἐὰν μὲν παρελάν, Σαβάζιον καλεῖν, ἐὰν δὲ ἱερὸν, ἐνταῦθα †ἱερὸν† εὐθὺς ἰδρύσασθαι· καὶ τῶν λιπαρῶν λίθων τῶν ἐν ταῖς τριόδοις παριῶν ἐκ τῆς ληκύθου ἔλαιον καταχεῖν καὶ ἐπὶ γόνατα πεσὼν καὶ προσκυνήσας ἀπαλλάττεσθαι· καὶ ἐὰν μὴς θύλακον ἀλφίτων διαφάγῃ, πρὸς τὸν ἐξηγητὴν ἐλθὼν ἐρωτᾷν τί χρὴ ποιεῖν· καὶ ἐὰν ἀποκρίνηται αὐτῷ, ἐκδοῦ-ναι τῷ σκυτοδέσῃ ἐπιβράσσει, μὴ προσέχειν τούτοις, ἀλλ' ἀποτραπείας ἐκθύσασθαι. καὶ πυκνὰ δὲ τὴν οἰκίαν κα-θᾶραι δεινός, Ἐκάτης φάσκων ἐπαγωγὴν γεγονέναι· κἂν γλαυῆς βαδίζοντος αὐτοῦ ταραττήται, εἴπας, Ἀθηναῖ κρείττων, οὕτω παρελθεῖν· καὶ οὔτε ἐπιβῆναι μνήματι οὔτε

XXVIII. THE SUPERSTITIOUS MAN.

SUPERSTITION would seem to be simply cowardice in regard to the supernatural.

The Superstitious man is one who will wash his hands at a fountain, sprinkle himself from a temple-font, put a bit of laurel-leaf into his mouth, and so go about for the day. If a weasel run across his path, he will not pursue his walk until someone else has traversed the road, or until he has thrown three stones across it. When he sees a serpent in his house, if it be the red snake, he will invoke Sabazius,—if the sacred snake, he will straightway place a shrine on the spot. He will pour oil from his flask on the smooth stones at the cross-roads as he goes by, and will fall on his knees and worship them before he departs. If a mouse gnaws through a meal-bag, he will go to the expounder of sacred law and ask what is to be done; and if the answer is, 'give it to a cobbler to stitch up,' he will disregard this counsel, and go his way, and expiate the omen by sacrifice. He is apt, also, to purify his house frequently, alleging that Hecate has been brought into it by spells; and if an owl is startled by him in his walk, he will exclaim 'Glory be to Athene!' before he proceeds. He will not tread upon a tombstone, ἐπὶ νεκρὸν οὐτ' ἐπὶ λεχῶ ἔλθειν ἐβελῆσαι, ἀλλὰ τὸ μὴ μαινεσθαι συμφέρον αὐτῷ φῆσαι εἶναι· καὶ ταῖς τετράσι δὲ καὶ ταῖς ἐβδομάσι προστάξας οἶνον ἔψειν τοῖς ἔνδον ἐξελθὼν ἀγοράσαι μυρσίνας, λιβανωτὸν, μίλακα, καὶ εἰσελθὼν εἶσω στεφανοῦν τοὺς Ἑρμαφροδίτους ὅλην τὴν ἡμέραν· καὶ ὅταν ἐνύπνιον ἴδῃ, πορεύεσθαι πρὸς τοὺς ὄνειροκρίτας, πρὸς τοὺς μάντεις, πρὸς τοὺς ὀρνιθοσκόπους ἐρωτήσων τίνι θεῷ ἢ θεᾷ εὐχέσθαι δεῖ· καὶ τελεσθησόμενος πρὸς τοὺς Ὀρφεοτελεστάς κατὰ μῆνα πορεύεσθαι μετὰ τῆς γυναικὸς, εἰ δὲ μὴ σχολάξῃ ἢ γυνή, μετὰ τῆς τίτθης καὶ τῶν παιδίων· καὶ τῶν περιβραυνομένων ἀπὸ θαλάττης ἐπιμελῶς δόξειεν ἂν εἶναι· καὶ ποτε ἐπιβῇ σκοροδῶν ἐστιώμεναν τῶν ἐπὶ ταῖς τριόδοις, ἀπελθὼν κατὰ κεφαλῆς λούσασθαι, καὶ ἱερείᾳ καλέσας σκύλλη ἢ σκύλακι κελεύσαι αὐτὸν περικαθᾶραι· μαινόμενόν τε ἰδὼν ἢ ἐπιληπτοῦ φρίξας εἰς κόλπον πτύσαι.

or come near a dead body or a woman defiled by childbirth, saying that it is expedient for him not to be polluted. Also on the fourth and seventh days of each month he will order his servants to mull wine, and will go out and buy myrtle-wreaths, frankincense, convolvuluses; and on coming in will spend the day in crowning the Hermaphrodites. When he has seen a vision he will go to the interpreters of dreams, the seers, the augurs, to ask them to what god or goddess he ought to pray. Every month he will repair to the priests of the Orphic Mysteries, to partake in their rites, accompanied by his wife, or (if she is too busy) by his children and their nurse. He would seem, too, to be of those who are scrupulous in sprinkling themselves with sea-water; and if ever he observes anyone feasting on the garlic at the cross-roads, he will go away, pour water over his head, and, summoning the priestesses, bid them carry a squill or a puppy round him for purification. And if he sees a maniac or an epileptic man he will shudder and spit into his bosom.

ὀλιγαρχίας κθ'.

δόξειε δ' ἂν εἶναι ἡ ὀλιγαρχία φιλαρχία τις, ἰσχύος, οὐ κέρδους γλιχομένη, ὃ δὲ ὀλίγαρχος τοιοῦτος οἶος, τοῦ δήμου βουλευομένου τίνας τῷ ἄρχοντι προσαιρήσονται τῆς πομπῆς τοὺς συνεπιμελησομένους, παρελθὼν ἀποφῆναι ὡς δεῖ αὐτοκράτορας τούτους εἶναι· κἂν ἄλλοι προβάλλωνται δέκα, λέγειν· ἱκανὸς εἰς ἐστίν· τούτον δὲ ὅτι δεῖ ἄνδρα εἶναι· καὶ τῶν Ὀμήρου ἐπῶν τοῦτο ἐν μόνον κατέχειν, ὅτι οὐκ ἀγαθὸν πολυκοιρανίῃ· εἰς κοίρανος ἔστω, τῶν δὲ ἄλλων μηδὲν ἐπίστασθαι. ἀμέλει δὲ δεινὸς τοῖς τοιούτοις τῶν λόγων χρήσασθαι, ὅτι δεῖ αὐτοὺς ἡμᾶς συνελθόντας περὶ τούτων βουλευσασθαι καὶ ἐκ τοῦ ὄχλου καὶ τῆς ἀγορᾶς ἀπαλλαγῆναι, καὶ παύσασθαι ἀρχαῖς πλησιάζοντας καὶ ὑπὸ τούτων ὑβριζομένους ἢ τιμωμένους· καὶ ὅτι ἡ τούτους δεῖ ἢ ἡμᾶς οἰκεῖν τὴν πόλιν· κατὰ μέσον δὲ τῆς ἡμέρας ἐξιὼν τὸ ἱμάτιον ἀναβεβλημένος καὶ μέσην κουράν κεκαρμένος καὶ ἀκριβῶς ἀπωνυχισμένος σοβεῖν τοὺς τοιούτους λόγους † λέγων διὰ τὴν τοῦ Ὠιδείου· † διὰ τοὺς συκοφάντας

XXIX. THE OLIGARCH.

THE Oligarchical temper would seem to consist in a love of authority, covetous, not of gain, but of power.

The Oligarchical man is one who, when the people are deliberating whom they shall associate with the archon as joint directors of the procession, will come forward and express his opinion that these directors ought to have plenary powers; and, if others propose ten, he will say that 'one is sufficient,' but that 'he must be a man.' Of Homer's poetry he has mastered only this one line,— of the rest he is absolutely ignorant. It is very much in his manner to use phrases of this kind: 'We must meet and discuss these matters by ourselves, and get clear of the rabble and the marketplace:' 'we must leave off courting office, and being slighted or graced by these fellows;' 'either they or we must govern the city.' He will go out about the middle of the day with his cloak gracefully adjusted, his hair daintily trimmed, his nails delicately pared, and strut through the Odeum Street, making such remarks as these: 'There is no living οὐκ οἰκητέον ἐστὶν ἐν τῇ πόλει· καὶ ὡς ἐν τοῖς δικαστη-ρίοις δεινὰ πάσχομεν ὑπὸ τῶν δικαζόντων· καὶ ὡς θαν-μάζω τῶν πρὸς τὰ κοινὰ προσιόντων, τί βούλονται· καὶ ὡς ἀχάριστόν ἐστι τὸ πλῆθος καὶ αἰ τοῦ νέμοντος καὶ διδόντος· καὶ ὡς αἰσχύνεται ἐν τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ ὅταν παρα-κάθηται τις αὐτῷ λεπτὸς καὶ αἰχμῶν· καὶ εἰπεῖν· πότε πανσόμεθα ὑπὸ τῶν λειτουργιῶν καὶ τῶν τριηραρχιῶν ἀπολλύμενοι; καὶ ὡς μισητὸν τὸ τῶν δημαγωγῶν γένος· καὶ τὸν Θησέα πρῶτον φῆσαι τῶν κακῶν τῇ πόλει γεγονέναι αἴτιον· τοῦτον γὰρ ἐκ δώδεκα πόλεων εἰς μίαν καταγαγόντα λῦσαι τὴν βασιλείαν· καὶ δίκαια αὐτὸν παθεῖν· πρῶτον γὰρ αὐτὸν ἀπολέσθαι ὑπ' αὐτῶν· καὶ τοιαῦτα ἕτερα πρὸς τοὺς ξένους καὶ τῶν πολιτῶν τοὺς ὁμοτρόπους καὶ ταῦτ' αἰρομένους.

No good comes of manifold rule; let the ruler be one:

in Athens for the informers:’ ‘we are shamefully treated in the courts by the juries:’ ‘I cannot conceive what people want with meddling in public affairs:’ ‘how ungrateful the people are—always the slaves of a largess or a bribe;’ and ‘how ashamed I am when a meagre, squalid fellow sits down by me in the Ecclesia!’ ‘When,’ he will ask, ‘will they have done ruining us with these public services and trierarchies? How detestable that set of demagogues is! Theseus’ (he will say) ‘was the beginning of the mischief to the State. It was he who reduced it from twelve cities to one, and undid the monarchy. And he was rightly served; for he was the people’s first victim himself.’

And so on to foreigners and to those citizens who resemble him in their disposition and their politics.

φιλοπονηρίας λ'.

ἔστι δὲ ἡ φιλοπονηρία ἐπιθυμία κακίας· ὁ δὲ φιλοπονηρὴς ἐστὶ τοιόσδε τις οἷος ἐντυγχάνειν τοῖς ἡττημένοις καὶ δημοσίους ἀγῶνας ὠφληκόσι καὶ ὑπολαμβάνειν, εἰς τούτοις χρήται, ἐμπειρότερος γενήσεσθαι καὶ φοβερώτερος· καὶ ἐπὶ τοῖς χρηστοῖς εἰπεῖν, ὡς γίνεται· καὶ φῆσαι ὡς οὐδεὶς ἐστὶ χρηστός, καὶ ὁμούςους πάντας εἶναι· καὶ ἐπισκῶψαι δὲ, ὡς χρηστός ἐστι· καὶ τὸν πονηρὸν δὲ εἰπεῖν ἐλεύθερον, εἰς βούληταί τις εὖ σκοπεῖν· καὶ τὰ μὲν ἄλλα ὁμολογεῖν ἀληθῆ ὑπὲρ αὐτοῦ λέγεσθαι ὑπὸ τῶν ἀνθρώπων, ἔνια δὲ ἀγνοεῖν φῆσαι· εἶναι γὰρ αὐτὸν εὐφυῆ καὶ φιλέταιρον καὶ ἐπιδέξιον· καὶ διατείνεσθαι δὲ ὑπὲρ αὐτοῦ ὡς οὐκ ἐντετύχηκεν ἀνθρώπῳ ἰκανωτέρῳ· καὶ εὖνους δὲ εἶναι αὐτῷ ἐν ἐκκλησίᾳ λέγοντι ἢ ἐπὶ δικαστηρίου κρινομένῳ· καὶ πρὸς τοὺς καθημένους δὲ εἰπεῖν δεινὸς ὡς οὐ δεῖ τὸν ἄνδρα ἀλλὰ τὸ πρᾶγμα

XXX. THE PATRON OF RASCALS.

THE Patronising of Rascals is a form of the appetite for vice.

The Patron of Rascals is one who will throw himself into the company of those who have lost lawsuits and have been found guilty in criminal causes; conceiving that, if he associates with such persons, he will become more a man of the world, and will inspire the greater awe. Speaking of honest men he will add 'so-so,' and will remark that no one is honest,—all men are alike; indeed, one of his sarcasms is, 'What an honest fellow!' Again he will say that the rascal is 'a frank man, if one will look fairly at the matter.' 'Most of the things that people say of him,' he admits, 'are true; but some things' (he adds) 'they do not know; namely that he is a clever fellow, and fond of his friends, and a man of tact;' and he will contend in his behalf that he has 'never met with an abler man.' He will show him favour, also, when he speaks in the Ecclesia or is at the bar of a court; he is fond, too, of remarking to the bench, 'The question is of the cause, not of the person.'

κρίνεσθαι· καὶ φῆσαι αὐτὸν κύνα εἶναι τοῦ δήμου, φυλάττειν γὰρ αὐτὸν τοὺς ἀδικοῦντας· καὶ εἰπεῖν ὡς οὐχ ἔξομεν τοὺς ὑπὲρ τῶν κοινῶν συναχθεσθαι τομένους ἂν τοὺς τοιοῦτους προώμεθα. δεινὸς δὲ καὶ προστατῆσαι φαύλων καὶ συνεδρεῦσαι ἐν δικαστηρίοις ἐπὶ ποιηροῖς πράγμασι, καὶ κρίσιν κρίνων ἐκδέχεσθαι τὰ ὑπὸ τῶν ἀντιδίκων λεγόμενα ἐπὶ τὸ χεῖρον.

[καὶ τὸ ὅλον ἡ φιλοπονηρία ἀδελφὴ ἐστὶ τῆς ποιηρίας, καὶ ἀληθές ἐστὶ τὸ τῆς παροιμίας, τὸ ὅμοιον πρὸς τὸ ὅμοιον πορεύεσθαι.]

‘The defendant,’ he will say, ‘is the watch-dog of the people,—he keeps an eye on evil-doers. We shall have nobody to take the public wrongs to heart, if we allow ourselves to lose such men.’ Then he is apt to become the champion of worthless persons, and to form conspiracies in the law-courts in bad causes; and, when he is hearing a case, to take up the statements of the litigants in the worst sense.

[In short, sympathy with rascality is sister to rascality itself; and true is the proverb that ‘Like moves towards like.’]

NOTES.

NOTES.

THE PROEM.

1 Often before now &c.] Since the criticism of C. G. Sonntag, published in 1787, on this proem, there has been no doubt among scholars of its spuriousness. The fatuous remark with which it begins, the sensational statement as to the writer's age, and the general feebleness of the whole production betray a clumsy forger. Petersen's conjecture (p. 62) that he probably was not a dweller in Greece seems likely enough. See Introd. p. 40.

2 ninety years and nine] Diogenes (v. 40) says that Theophrastus died at 85. This, as Zeller says (Philosoph. der Gr. Part II. sect. 2. p. 641), is a good deal more probable than the statement here. The only confirmation of the latter is Jerome's assertion (Ep. 34 ad Nepotian. iv. b.) that Theophrastus lived to 107: but even there another reading is 'Themistoclem.'

3 class by class] κατὰ γένος. Schneider and Ussing understand these words rightly, but strangely say that the promise is not fulfilled, since the Characters, as they have come to us, are not arranged 'in any certain order.' But κατὰ γένος means only that several classes, γένη, of characters are to be described, one by one; not necessarily in any particular order. Ast, on the other hand, is wrong, I think, in taking κατὰ γένος to mean 'generically,' generatim, 'ita ut non singulos vel certos quosdam homines exhibeam, sed hominum mores in universum exponam.' This would surely be γενικῶς.

4 both the good and the worthless among men] The author of the poem goes on to say that he will describe both sorts. There may have been, in his time, a tradition that the book had once contained descriptions of virtues as well as vices, or this may have been his own opinion; accordingly he writes such a preface as he conceived that the book in its complete state might have had. Petersen, believing the Characters to be extracts from the large work περὶ ἠθῶν, suggests that the extractor may have begun with the intention of selecting descriptions of virtues also. See Introd. p. 41.

I. THE FLATTERER.

1 Flattery] The Definition is defective. It describes the manner in which Flattery affects the interests of the person who practises it; but does not say what it is in respect to the person who is its object; viz. a desire to please.

After describing the man who conducts himself in society as he ought to do, and observing that for this mean there is no name, Aristotle says (Eth. Nic. IV. 6): 'Of those who try to give pleasure, he who with no further motive aims at being pleasant is Complaisant (ἀρεσκος, see c. II.); he who does so in order that advantage may accrue to him in respect of money or anything that money procures is a Flatterer: while he who is peevish about everything is (as has been said) Cross (δύσκολος—the αὐθάδης of Theophrastus, c. III.) and Quarrelsome.'

The notion conveyed by the term κολακεία is not precisely what we usually mean by 'flattery,' but something coarser. It meant a sort of extravagant toadyism, practised, not as a fine art, but simply as an industry—as a recognised method of obtaining a livelihood. This tone is unconsciously illustrated by Athenaeus when, in his reminiscences of eminent Flatterers (VI. pp. 248—260), he speaks of 'Cheirisophus, the flatterer of Dionysius,' 'Callicrates, the flatterer of Ptolemy,' 'Anaxarchus, one of the flatterers of Alexander.' These men had, as it were, been preferred to permanent posts. The remark (Ath. VI. p. 248 § 53) that the κόλαξ 'is not far from the Parasite' is true in so far as material benefit—especially in the form of entertainment—was the object of both. But the κόλαξ claimed this in right of a supposed personal devotion, the Parasite rather in virtue of his power to amuse.

2 the Porch] i. e. the σποὰ ποικίλη, the Porch of Paintings: a piazza, not attached to any building, standing at the N.E. corner of the Market-place. It was furnished with stone benches, and afforded the kind of shelter for conversation and exercise needed in a warm climate. Of the paintings on its walls the most famous were Micon's fresco of Theseus and the Amazons, and a fresco of Marathon by Polygnotus. In front stood a row of bronze statues, among which Pausanias (about 180 A.D.) mentions those of Solon and Seleucus.—Two other piazzas of the same kind stood in the Market-place; (1) the Royal Porch, where the 'king' Archon held his court, on the S.W. side; and (2) the Porch of Freedom, probably to the E. of it—so called from a statue of Zeus Eleutherios.

3 a morsel of wool] Suidas gives κροκύδας ἀφαρτεῖν: 'to pick off shreds,' as a proverb for those 'who will do anything for the sake of flattery.' Hesychius explains the word κροκυλεγγμός—'the picking off of shreds in the manner of a flatterer.' According to Plutarch, Valeria, Sulla's last wife, first attracted his notice at the theatre by the attention of removing a thread from his cloak (Sulla. c. 35). Ovid attributes a like flattery to the skilful lover (Amor. III. 2. 41):—

Ah, while I speak, one small speck here doth rest—
Away, base atom, from that snowy breast!

4 white hairs] So in the Knights, where Kleon and his rival are bidding against each other for the favour of Demus (v. 966):—'Kl. And I will pluck out your grey hairs and make you young again.'

5 laugh at a frigid joke] Compare Athénæus vi. p. 249 § 55:—'The same authority (one Hegesander) relates that Cherrisophus, the flatterer of Dionysius, seeing his patron laughing with some acquaintances—(he was too far from them to hear the conversation)—laughed too. When Dionysius asked him why he was laughing when he could not hear what was said, he answered, "My confidence in you assures me that the remark was amusing."'

6 his Honour] αὐτός, ἑipse, 'the master;,' said especially of the head of a household or of a school. See the Clouds (v. 218): 'Strepsiades. Pray, now, who is this person suspended in a basket? Disciple. It is himself. S. And who is "himself"? D. Socrates.'

7 assisting at the purchase of slippers] The κρηπίς was probably a kind of half-shoe, covering the fore part of the foot, and strapped on at the heels. The ordinary Greek foot-covering, the hypodema, was a sandal bound under the foot; the 'sandalion,' a sandal with a small upper leather across the toe, but covering less of the fore part of the foot than the 'crepis;' the 'embas' was the shoe proper. See Bekker's Exc. to sc. XI. of the Charicles.

8 the Women's Market] Mentioned again in c. XXV. as the place from which a female slave is hired. Nothing is certainly known about it. Bekker (Char. Exc. to sc. IV.) shows that it probably does not mean 'the market frequented by women,' since at Athens freewomen never, and female slaves rarely, marketed. He suggests that it may have been (1) a market in which the sellers were women: (2) a market in which articles chiefly for female use were sold.—Ussing prefers to suppose that it was (3) the place where slave-girls were sold or hired. The word θυναρίς in the text seems to imply that the mission was discreditable.

9 to praise the wine] Thus Horace's host Nasidienus had invited Nomentanus to dinner in order that he might call attention 'to anything which was escaping notice' (Sat. II. 8. 25).

10 the cushions] As the seats in the theatre were merely semicircular tiers of rock-hewn ledges, those who desired to be comfortable brought their own cushions. Kleon's rival in the Knights pities Demus for the discomforts of the Pnyx:—'He (Kleon) does not care how uneasily you sit on the rocks. How different from me, who have had this'—(producing a cushion)—'stitched up as a present for you.' (v. 783). Aeschines (in Ctes. p. 64 § 76) alleges in proof of the servility of Demosthenes to Macedon that, when Philip's envoys were introduced to the Ecclesia, he ushered them to the place of honour, 'and arranged cushions and spread purple draperies.' Ovid says (Art. Am. I. 160):—

Small things take triflers: men have owed a place
To smoothing cushions with a dexterous grace.

11 his portrait] The word εἰκών here is probably to be understood, not of a painting, but of a portrait-statue or bust. In Diog. Laert. v. 52 the execution of the 'portrait' of Nicomachus for which Theophrastus left directions in his will is assigned to Praxiteles the sculptor.

II. THE COMPLAISANT MAN.

1 Complaisance] The word rendered 'mode of address'—ἔντευξις—occurs again in the same sense in the Defn. to c. XI. It is not equivalent to ὁμιλία, but narrower in meaning, denoting chiefly the manner of accosting: see Athen. vi. p. 256 § 16, 'Their (the flatterers') mode of address (ἔντευξις) is so artistic, so plausible towards all men.'

The Flatterer, according to Aristotle, flatters for money or what money buys: the Complaisant man 'aims at being pleasant with no further object' (μηδὲ δι' ἄλλο τι). This is a fault (1) because to combat the wishes of others is sometimes a duty to them or to oneself: thus Aristotle's Perfectly-behaved man is one who will occasionally 'make difficulties' (δυσχεραίνειν) for either reason or both: Eth. Nic. iv. 6. (2) Because the primary object of the Complaisant man is, not that others may be pleased, but that he may be pleasant. He desires popularity, either from mere vanity, or for the sake of influence. When, therefore, he is said to aim at being pleasant 'without any further object,' this does not exclude a selfish object. To be thought pleasant is itself the object which he most covets. He is unmercenary, as contrasted with the Flatterer: but he is not disinterested.

In the pair of portraits which Theophrastus has drawn two salient points of difference may be noted. (1) The Flatterer treats his patron as an admired superior, for whom he displays devotion, but whom it would be impertinent to assure of his goodwill. The Complaisant man treats his associate as an equal for whom he has a warm friendship. (2) The Flatterer, who desires material benefits, is constant to a once-found patron; partly because ripe intimacy is essential to complete success, and partly because he is unwilling to relinquish a certainty. The Complaisant man, on the other hand, desires to be on creditably cordial terms with as large a number of persons as possible.

2 to an arbitration] The system of Arbitration at Athens served in some degree to mitigate the Athenian passion for lawsuits—it being understood that 'the arbitrator looks to equity, as the judge to the law' (Ar. Rhet. i. 13). Arbitrators were of two kinds: (1) Public; four, probably, for each of the ten tribes. One or more of these could try any civil cause, if the complainant preferred that course to going before a jury. Or a particular question of fact involved in a civil cause was sometimes referred to them. (2) Private: chosen to settle a dispute by mutual agreement between the parties. In this case there were usually three arbitrators. Two of these were considered as advocates respectively of the two disputants. The third sat as umpire (Demosth. in Neaer. p. 1360 § 45). Here the Complainant man is one of the advocates. In c. IV. the Arrogant man is the umpire.

3 that foreigners speak more justly] This may be understood merely of general conversation. There were, however, two occasions on which this tendency might find special scope. The mercantile contracts (σύμβολα) between the Greek republics provided for the hearing, in the defendant's city, of lawsuits arising out of commerce. In such an action tried at Athens the foreigner would therefore always be the complainant; and the Complainant juror may be conceived as warmly sympathising with his grievance. Again, when foreign envoys made a representation or a demand before the Ecclesia, the Complainant citizen would ostentatiously support their claim.

In this instance the man whose sole aim is to please voluntarily offends the sentiment of the majority for the sake of conciliating a small minority. This might at first sight appear inconsistent with his character. But it is, in fact, perfectly true to it. The Complainant man believes that the regard of any individual can be purchased outright by certain ignoble civilities. Once bought, it is his property; and, on his principle that friendships are to be counted, not weighed, his next object is to secure the regard of some one else. His citizens are always with him; but if the 'foreigners' are to be enrolled among his acquaintance, this must be done while they are at Athens.

4 to send for the children] The doom of seclusion under which the Women's Apartment lay does not seem to have extended in its full rigour to the nursery. Children, or at least young boys, were sometimes guests in the dining-room: see Lucian's Dream, c. 11: 'Come you, too, Micyllus, and dine with us: I will send my boy to dine in the Women's Apartments, that there may be room for you.' But when young people came to table they sat; to recline was the privilege of their elders. See Xenophon's Sympos. i. 12, 'Autolycus' (a boy old enough to have won the pancratium, i. e. about 14) 'sat beside his father; the other guests reclined as usual.'

5 and kiss them] The Flatterer, when he wished to pay his court to the children, felt it necessary to present them with fruit. This illustrates the distinction referred to in the first note to this chapter. As the Flatterer had voluntarily assumed a quasi-menial position, he could not expect, like the Complaisant man, that his mere good-humour with the children should gratify their father.

6 'Wine-skin'—'Hatchet'] Some child's-game, of which nothing is known. It may have consisted, for instance, in one of the players bringing down his hand edgewise ('hatchet') on the other's clenched fist, before he could snatch it away. That the words are not names which the guest calls the children—as they have usually been explained—is clear from the αὐτός in the text, which shows that the children said them too. Casaubon's theory that the 'wine-skin' and 'hatchet' were little toys (περιδέματα) hung round the children's necks, which the guest takes up and names successively, supposes the children to be infants.

III. THE SURLY MAN.

1 Surliness] The Definition is imperfect; for the person described here is discourteous not in words only but in deeds; as when he refuses to sing. Probably the composer of the Definition wished to convey the idea that the Surly man is rough on the surface only, but often kindly beneath it: e. g. he gives money to his friend in difficulties, though with a rude speech.

The conception of αὐθάδεια presented here illustrates a general characteristic of these sketches, of which c. XII. furnishes perhaps the best example. A word originally of large meaning is considered in that special sense to which social usage had narrowed it. Αὐθάδης is properly 'one who pleases himself'; the word might, and did, express every shade of self-will, from the stubbornness of a Prometheus to the caprice of a coquette. But Theophrastus—in accordance, probably, with the usage of his day—limits it to one special case. His αὐθάδης is the man of morose, unsociable manners; apt to make rude speeches and to be generally ungracious; tenacious, above all things, of his independence, to the extent of grudging homage to the gods; but capable of doing kindnesses, though in a rude way. We know from other sources that the word had come to be used in this special sense—of a certain manner in society; but the quality of this manner is variously described. Already in Euripides (Medea, 223) the αὐθάδης is one who is 'harsh to his fellow-citizens, from want of culture' (πικρὸς...ἀμαθίας ὄντο). The author of the Magna Moralia (prob. later than Aristotle, Grant, Vol. I. Essay I. p. 14) describes the αὐθάδης very much as he is described here—'one who will not associate or converse with any man' (I. 28). Eudemus, contemporary with Theophrastus, identifies the αὐθάδης with the δύσκολος, or Cross man, of Aristotle, the opposite of the κόλαξ and ἄρεσκος (Eth. Nic. iv. 6. 9), describing him as 'regulating his life with no respect to others (μηδὲν πρὸς ἕτερον ζῶν), but contemptuous' (Eth. Eudem. iii. 7. 4). This element of 'contempt' becomes the distinctive feature of αὐθάδεια in the analysis given of it by Philodemus of Gadara, a contemporary of Cicero:—'The so-called Surly man (ὁ αὐθάδης λεγόμενος) seems to be compounded of conceit (οἷσις), arrogance (ὑπερηφάνια), and contemptuousness (ὑπεροψία).' (De Vitiis x. col. xvi. 39 ed. Ussing.) That is, he thinks too highly of himself (conceit), too meanly of others (contempt), and acts upon his estimate (arrogance). Philodemus adds this example:—Sharing a bath with another person, the Surly man will order hot (or cold) water without previously consulting his associate.

Now this is what the Arrogant man of Theophrastus (c. iv.) would do; but not what his Surly man would do; and it may be proper to point out the main differences between them as conceived by him. 1. The Surly man acts chiefly from a desire to be left alone; though, as proud men are also reserved, he often seems to act from pride. The Arrogant man acts from a desire to enforce the recognition of a fancied superiority. 2. The Surly man repels advances, but does not take liberties. The Arrogant man does both.

2 at feast-time] The great festivals were occasions not only of public sacrifice but of private sacrifices in every house. Portions (μερίδες) of the flesh were often sent to those friends who were not present at the dinner given after the sacrifice (c. xv. note 2). Thus, when the Discontented man receives such a present (c. xxii.) he complains that it is a poor substitute for an invitation to the dinner. See Ar. Acharn. 1048: 'Slave. Dicaeopolis! D. Whom have we here? S. A bridegroom has sent you this flesh from the wedding feast.' Plutarch mentions this among the attentions by which Antigonos Gonatas sought to conciliate the founder of the Achaean League: 'Whenever he held a sacrifice at Corinth he used to send portions of the flesh to Aratus at Sicyon' (Arat. c. 15). The Pitcher-feast (the second day of the Anthesteria) was especially an occasion for such offerings: see c. XXVI. note 14.

3 with their compliments] Xen. Cyrop. VIII. 2. 4: 'Also, when he had occasion to commend any of his domestics, he used to compliment them with presents from his table' (ἐρίμα ἀπὸ τῆς τραπέζης).

4 for a subscription] See c. v. note 5.

5 will not consent to sing] i.e., to take his turn in the σκόδιον, or 'catch,' which the company are singing over their wine. Each guest, though not in regular order, usually sang a short stanza or verse. In Athenaeus (xv. p. 695 § 50) the first singer gives an alcaic stanza on the dangers of the sea; the second takes him up with a quatrain in the style of a nursery rhyme; the third, fourth, fifth and sixth then go through the stanzas on Harmódios and Aristogeiton.—In the Clouds, Pheidippides incenses his father by acting as the αὐθάδης does here. 'First I requested him to take the lyre, and sing a song of Simonides, the Shearing of the Ram; but he quickly objected that to play the lyre and sing at dessert was an old-fashioned custom' (vv. 1355 ff.).

6 to recite] ῥῆσις meant especially a speech from a tragedy. Demosthenes gives as instances of ῥῆσις the prologue of the Hecuba and the Messenger's speech from an unknown play (de Coron. p. 315 § 267, cf. Ar. Wasps, 580). The declamation of such a passage seems to have been accepted at entertainments as a substitute for a song. Thus when Pheidippides haughtily refuses to sing, his father requests him 'at least to take the myrtle branch and say something from Aeschylus,' and finally 'he chanted a speech (ῆσε ῥῆσιν) from Euripides (Clouds, 1371). Aeschines speaks of his rival 'telling the Senate a long story about the young Alexander—how he played the lyre to us over our wine, declaimed some speeches, and sang see-saw catches (ἀντικρούσεις) with another youth' (in Timarch. p. 24 § 160).

7 to dance] See c. IX. note 7.

8 not to pray to the gods] This touch alone momentarily lifts the αἰθάλης of Theophrastus from his petty sullenness into something of that more tragic obstinacy which the old poets associated with αἰθάδεια. In the Prometheus Vincitus αἰθάλης is the word used to describe, on the one hand, the stubborn patience of the sufferer,—on the other, the inflexible resolve of Zeus (vv. 928, 985). It was αἰθάδεια, stubborn self-reliance, says Plutarch (Crass. 19), which prevented Crassus from recalling an ill-omened speech which had excited the superstitious fears of his men: see c. XIII. note 10. In this, its sterner sense, αἰθάλης would exactly describe Virgil's contemptor divom Mesentius.

IV. THE ARROGANT MAN.

1 Arrogance] The relation of Arrogance, as treated by Theophrastus, to Surliness has been spoken of in note 1 to c. III. In regard to Aristotle's system, Arrogance is a species of what he terms χαυρότης, Vanity or Inflation—the opposite extreme being Mean-spiritedness, and the middle state Lofty-mindedness. A remark which Aristotle makes in speaking of these qualities is worthy of attention—viz. that the Vain man may possess the same things (e.g. ability, wealth, etc.) which go to justify the Lofty-minded man's claim to high consideration; but the Vain man's claim is invalid on moral grounds. 'Those who possess these advantages without virtue are neither entitled to deem themselves worthy of great things, nor are they properly called Lofty-minded... They mimic the Lofty-minded man, while they do not resemble him,—i.e. they do so in such things as they can; the actions which are according to virtue they, of course, cannot do; and at the same time they look down upon others. Now the Lofty-minded man looks down upon others justly (for he judges truly); but most people do so at random' (Eth. Nic. iv. 3. 20).

Casaubon considers the Arrogance described here as related, not only to Surliness, but to Boastfulness (c. VI.). But Boastfulness and Petty Ambition (c. VII.) are referable to a principle distinct from that of Arrogance,—the desire, namely, of honour, as distinguished from opinion concerning one's own worthiness for honour.

2 he will see him after dinner] The Ironical man acts, from a different motive, in the same way: see c. V. note 3.

3 when he is taking his walk] Plut. Thes. c. 35: 'Some say that he stumbled and fell accidentally, while taking his walk, as usual, after dinner.' The young Autolycus, in Xenophon's Symposium, leaves the party early 'to take his walk' (εἰς περιπάτον: IX. 1). Zeus, in Lucian's Zeus Tragoedus, says to the other gods,— 'We were entertained in the Peiraeus—as many of us, that is, as Mnestheus invited to the sacrifice. Then, after the libation, you went your various ways, as it pleased you; but I—for it was not very late—went back to the town to take my evening stroll (τὸ δειλινόν) in the Cerameicus' (c. 15).

4 to recollect benefits which he has conferred] i. e. he will remind others in a patronizing manner that he has placed them under obligations; which may or may not be true, for the ambiguous φάσκειν, 'to allege,' leaves it doubtful. This trait illustrates the difference between Arrogance and Lofty-mindedness. It is characteristic of the Lofty-minded man, as Aristotle observes, to remember whom he has benefited (Eth. Nic. IV. 3. 25). The Arrogant man (who is a bad imitation of the Lofty-minded, ib. 21) does not only remember,—he proclaims that he remembers.

5 who have made him their referee] See c. II. note 2.

6 when he is nominated to public offices] Some public officers (as the archons) were chosen by lot; others—as the ten Generals and all ambassadors—by show of hands in the Ecclesia. The suffrages of the people have nominated the Arrogant man to an office of the latter kind; but, as the appointment is invalid without his acceptance of office, the present tense is used, and he is said to be 'in process of being elected' (χειροτονούμενος). Instead of accepting, he makes an oath before the Ecclesia that he cannot serve; assigning, not a definite reason, such as illness or want of means, but the vague one that he is 'too busy.' See Demosth. de Fals. Legat. p. 379 § 124, where the brother of Aeschines takes a physician as his kind to the assembly, and makes oath of his brother's inability to serve on an embassy. From the version of this incident given by Aeschines, we learn a detail—viz. that an oath of this kind could not be made before the Senate, but only before the Ecclesia (Aeschin. de Falsa Legat. p. 40 § 95).

7 the first greeting] The first χαίρε was expected, of course, to come from the inferior. Micellus, in Lucian's Dream (c. 14) thus describes his meeting with an acquaintance who had suddenly grown rich: 'The other day I saw him approaching, and said 'Hail, O Simon.' But he, indignant: 'Servant, desire that needy person not to clip (κατασμικρύνειν) my name. My name is not Simon, but Simonides.'

8 when he walks in the streets] Athenian criticism on demeanour in the streets appears to have been severe. Athenaeus quotes two verses of Alexis—

Nothing, in my opinion, is so low
As walking out of just time in the streets:

(ἀρπύβως: Ath. I. p. 21 § 38). In the speech against Pantaenetus (Dem. adv. P. p. 982) it is anticipated that he may say of the defendant:—'Nicobulus is an unpopular man; he walks fast, talks loud, and carries a walking-stick' (the stick implying an affectation of Spartanism; c. VII. note 16); and after contrasting his own moral worth with that of the plaintiff, Nicobulus adds: 'Such, Pantaenetus, am I who walk quick, and such are you who walk composedly' (ἀτρέμας). Aeschines is described 'walking through the market-place with his cloak down to his heels, stepping as high as Pythocles'—(another orator of the Macedonian party)—Demosth. de Fals. Legat. p. 442 § 314. Plato expressly mentions 'walking quietly (ἡσυχῇ) in the streets' as a mark of σωφροσύνη: Charmid. p. 159 B.

9 when he is anointing himself or bathing] The exclusion of a visitor at such a time scarcely reaches the modern idea of Arrogance. But this is a good illustration of that hostility to domestic privacy which was bred in the citizens of a Greek republic of once by the temper of their race, by the physical conditions of their life, and (not least) by democratic sentiment. The first symptom in Pausanias of a transition to Persian manners was that 'he began to make himself difficult of access' (Thuc. I. 130). Menelaus, in Euripides, reproaches Agamemnon with having become, on his accession to power, 'hard for his friends to approach, keeping within bolted doors and seldom seen' (ἔσω κληθρῶν σπάνιος, Iph. Aut. 344). Agesilaus stole away the influence of Lysander because the latter 'affected a haughty reserve (ἄσεμνόνετο), being difficult of access, while the former delighted to be accessible to all' (Xen. Ages. 9. 2); and Plutarch, contrasting the same persons, describes the one as 'popular' (δημοτικός), the other as 'vulgar' (φορτικός: Plut. Ages. 7. 2: 8. 4).

10 push the counters apart] A difficulty has arisen concerning some item of the account. Instead of allowing the groups of counters on the counting-board to remain stationary until this difficulty has been settled, the Arrogant man desires his slave to break up the groups (διωθεῖν)—to form the counters in a line at the foot of the board, representing the total as it now stands—and to make out a bill accordingly. Compare c. XIII. note 2.

11 in writing a letter] Philodemus describes the Surly man (whom he considers as a variety of the Arrogant, see c. III. note 1) as 'one who in writing a letter will not add 'Hail' at the beginning, or 'Farewell' (ἔρρωσο) at the end' (De Vitiis x. col. xvii. 25 ed. Ussing).

V. THE IRONICAL MAN.

1 Irony] It is defined here as 'an affectation of the worse,' literally 'on the side of worse' (ἐπὶ χείρον), i. e. of self-depreciation. Aristotle (Eth. Nic. II. 7) defines Irony as προσποιήσις ἐπὶ τὸ ἔλαττον, 'pretence on the side of less,' i. e. conscious understating (or underacting) of the truth; and in the Eudemian Ethics (III. 7) the Ironical man is described as ἐπὶ τὰ χείρω καθ' αὐτοῦ ψευδόμενος, 'misrepresenting himself for the worse.' Both passages have contributed to the definition in the text; the latter supplying ἐπὶ τὸ χείρον (instead of ἔλαττον), the former προσποιήσις. From their fusion results a phrase which is faulty and inexact, but of which the general meaning is clear.

This sketch forms a remarkable chapter in the history of the word Irony; first, because of the restricted sense in which it is already employed by a pupil of Aristotle; and secondly because the conception, while thus narrowed, seems also to have become indistinct.

It is necessary to recall the sense in which Irony is understood by Aristotle (Eth. Nic. IV. 7 §§ 2 ff.). 'It seems to be the tendency of the Boastful man to lay claim to creditable things, either when they do not belong to him, or in a greater degree than they belong to him. The Ironical man, on the contrary, tends to disclaim or to depreciate things which do belong to him. The intermediate character, being (so to say) 'matter-of-fact' (αὐθέκαστος) is truthful in his life and in his speech, confessing the attributes which are his, and neither exaggerating nor extenuating them....Ironical persons, leaning to understatement, impress one as being more refined in character ; for they seem to speak with a view, not to advantage, but to avoiding pomposity. And moreover it is creditable things which such persons especially disclaim ; as, for example, did Socrates.' The general characteristic of the Ironical man is, then, that he holds in reserve, for whatever purpose, something of his available power. This purpose may be an earnest dialectic one, like that of Socrates. Or it may be to avoid ostentation or check impertinence ; as Aristotle's Lofty-minded man is 'ironical' to the common crowd (Eth. N. IV. 3. 28). Or the purpose may be merely playful ; as Anacharsis in Lucian says that the Athenians were reputed 'ironical' in conversation (Anach. c. 15).

Theophrastus has in most of his portraits embodied those traits which are generic to the character described. His Flatterer, his Avaricious man, his Boaster are fairly representative of the classes who flatter, hoard, or boast. But his picture of the Ironical man, judged by his master's standard, is strikingly inadequate. He does not show us the man whose habit it is—either in earnest or in jest, now for the discomfiture of pretence, now for the friendly insinuation of reproof or praise—to keep on the inside edge of the truth. He describes merely a person who takes a cynical pleasure in misleading or inconveniencing others by the concealment of his real feelings and intentions.

But not only is the conception of this portrait narrow ; it is also unfaithful to the essence of the quality portrayed by Plato and defined by Aristotle. True Irony is a masked battery, a screen assisting the more effective use of a real power which it veils. But the person described by Theophrastus appears to deceive for the sake of deceiving ; no touch in the picture suggests that he has any meaning or purpose in reserve. His irony resembles rather a curtain on the stage, with nothing behind it but the mechanism which sustains the illusion. Again, when he is described as expressing incredulity and cautioning another person against too ready belief, this is a misplaced characteristic. The ironical and the sceptical mind have, perhaps, much in common ; but the avowal, as distinguished from the insinuation, of unbelief is not a trait of Irony.

The characters of Theophrastus are essentially popular, interpreting the notions currently attached in society to certain epithets. In the present instance this fact, while lessening the author's responsibility for the defects of his portrait, heightens the significance of these defects themselves. It shows that a word most flexibly and delicately expressive, a word contrived to include, without confounding, innumerable shades of grave or playful tone; had scarcely passed into currency when it was debased. Already in the time of Aristotle's pupil 'irony' is popularly understood in a sense almost wholly bad, and the fine precision of the term has been lost. (In his note on Eth. N. IV. 7 § 3 Sir A. Grant has noticed this swift decay.)

The definition speaks of 'words and deeds:' but this sketch supplies no true example of practical irony. As in verbal irony there is a contrast between the thought and the expression, so in practical there must be a contrast between the apparent and the real character of the action: as when Timon (to borrow an illustration from Bp. Thirlwall's famous essay) gave the thieves gold to ruin them.

2 in their defeats] when they are defeated in lawsuits: for this meaning of ἡττᾶσθαι see cc. XVII, XXX.

3 to call again] This resembles a trait ascribed to the Arrogant man (c. IV.). But the Arrogant man puts off his visitor for the sake of asserting his own consequence; the Ironical man, merely because it is of his character to be evasive. The caller presses, perhaps, for a definite answer to some proposal which he has already made. The Ironical man (who has made up his mind, but enjoys mystification) replies—'I am afraid that I have not quite decided...Could you call to-morrow?'

4 he will pretend that he has just arrived] I understand this and the next two clauses as being the reasons which the Ironical man alleges for his ignorance of what has been passing in the world. He is in a company where some one asks him—'Have you heard what happened at A's house?' He replies (knowing the facts, but wishing to elicit the speaker's view of them) 'I have only just returned to town,' or 'I came too late for it,' or 'I have been ill for the last few days.' That μαλακισθῆναι refers to illness, seems certain from c. X, where ὁ μαλακίζόμενος is 'the invalid.'

5 a subscription] ἐρανος—such as was made for a man in difficulties by his friends. Compare cc. III, VI, XXV. It was usually understood that such assistance was a loan: see c. XXII

There were also at Athens regularly organized societies which, as well as the subscriptions paid to them, were called ἐπαροι. These seem to have been partly dining-clubs, partly associations for mutual relief in case of need. Demosthenes (in Meid. p. 574 § 184) alludes to both sorts of 'subscription'—that which was raised privately on occasion among friends, and that which was paid to a club. He is insisting on the practical value of a good character:—'I believe that all men in the course of their lives pay in subscriptions for their own benefit—not those merely (1) which individuals raise, or (2) for which collecting officers (πληρωταί) are appointed, but others also. For instance—we have among us a man considerate, humane, merciful to many: to such a man it is right that like measure should be meted by all, if ever he come to want or into peril of the law.' This custom of the ἐπαροι furnishes a favourite metaphor to the orators: e.g. Dem. in Aristog. I. p. 776 § 22: 'Everything that each man among us does by the injunction of the law is his contribution (ἐπαροι) as a citizen of the commonwealth.'

VI. THE BOASTFUL MAN.

I Boastfulness] ἀλαζονεία is with Aristotle the fault, in respect to truth, on the side of excess, as 'irony' on the side of defect; and the ἀλαζών is one 'who lays claim to creditable things which do not belong to him, or in a greater degree than they belong to him' (Eth. N. IV. 7). It is remarked in that chapter that 'those who boast for the sake of reputation lay claim to things for which men are praised or congratulated; those who boast for the sake of gain, to things which are available to others, and of which the non-possession may escape notice; to the character, for instance, of a clever seer or doctor.' The ἀλαζών of Theophrastus belongs to the former class; and accordingly pretends to wealth, generosity, etc. Aristotle further remarks that 'irony' may be pushed into ἀλαζονεία, 'as in the case of the Spartan style of dress; for both excess and extreme defects are in the nature of boastfulness.' The delineation of Theophrastus does not touch this more subtle form of the quality; and his ἀλαζών will therefore be adequately rendered by 'boastful,' as Menander's was by the Latin gloriosus (Plaut. Mil. Glor. II. I. 18).

'Boastful,' however, does not seem to be a perfect rendering for ἀλαζών in its most general sense. 'Boastful' implies pretension of a more direct, explicit kind than is necessarily intended by the Greek word; which included many more artistic forms of self-assertion. Thus a fashionable soothsayer might have been termed ἀλαζών; but would not be described in English as 'boastful.' Perhaps 'Swaggerer,' in the extended sense in which it is sometimes heard now, would convey the general notion of the word more faithfully. The simpler and more usual rendering, 'boastful,' has, however, been preferred here, since it was adequate to the occasion; and also because 'Swaggerer,' in its proper sense as applied to demeanour, answers more nearly to the Greek σαλακῶν (Ar. Rhet. II. xvi.).

The Aristotelian contrast between Irony and Boastfulness is not effectively maintained in the two sketches of Theophrastus; partly because the Irony of Theophrastus is not that of Aristotle (see c. v. note 1); partly because the relation of the Boastful man to truth is, for the purpose of this sketch, less important than the motive of his actions, viz. a desire of reputation. In this he resembles the man of Petty Ambition (c. VII.), but with a difference:—the latter places honour in trifles; the Boaster pretends to things which a majority of men do, in fact, honour.

2 the great sums which he has at sea] Money lent on bottomry (ναυτικόν) was lost to the lender in case of disaster to the ship: 'the contract (συγγραφὴν) providing, as is the invariable rule, for the repayment of the money in case of the ship coming safe into harbour' (Dem. adv. Zenoth. p. 863 § 5). Hence the rate of interest was high: Dem. adv. Polycl. p. 1212 § 17 speaks of ναυτικὸν ἐπόγδοον, i.e. money thus lent at 12½ per cent. Cf. Xen. Vect. III. 9, 'He gets, as on bottomry, about 20 per cent.' (ἐπίπλεμπτον αὐτῷ γίγνεται).

3 money-lending business] The bankers (τραπεζίται) who kept the tables in the market-place were generally money-lenders (δανεισται) too; but money-lending was also carried on, both on a great and on a small scale, as a distinct business. Alciphro's Letters relate some of the bitter experiences of countrymen in their dealings with 'the town usurers.' A fisherman who requires a new net has recourse to such help. 'Then that shrivelled Chremes, with contracted brows, whose eyes all men like a wild bull, enamoured, perhaps, of my boat, relaxed his severe, unsmiling face; lifted his eyes; smiled softly on me, and professed himself ready to do me any service... But when, the time having come, he demanded back principal and interest without allowing one day's grace, I recognised my old friend whom I remembered sitting at the Diomeian gate,—the possessor of the crooked stick, the enemy of all men, Chremes of Phyle.' He sells his wife's necklace to 'Pasion the banker,'—pays the usurer—and vows 'never again to go to one of the city money-lenders, though he should be worn to a shadow with hunger first' (Alc. III. 3).

4 in the bazaar] The bazaar, δειγμα, where merchants displayed samples of their wares, was on the shore of the Peiraeus, where there were other places of business, e.g. the Corn Market (ἀλφιτοπωλῆς στοά, Ar. Eccl. 682). That it was close to the quays appears from Xenophon's account of the descent made upon the Peiraeus by Teleutias in 389 B.C.: 'Some of his men, too, sprang ashore into the bazaar, and, seizing some merchants and skippers, carried them on board' (Hellen. v. 1. 21). Compare Lysias frag. 45 § 7: 'As he could not walk, they carried him on the sofa to the bazaar, and showed him in that state to many Athenians and foreigners.'—On the reading διαζεύματι, see Crit. App. VI. 2.

5 with Alexander] On the reading Εὐάνδρου, see Crit. App. VI. 3.—Compare the strain in which the Miles Gloriosus of Plautus (Menander's Ἀλαζών) boasts of his exploits in Asia (Act I. Sc. 1. etc.).

6 gemmed cups] Compare Juvenal v. 37 ff.:—'In Virro's own hands are beakers on which the tears of the Sun-maidens have stiffened, and saucers embossed with beryl. You are not trusted with gold—or, when it is given to you, a sentinel is planted on the spot, to count the gems and watch your sharp nails. Excuse him; there is a fine and admired jasper there; for Virro, like many, shifts from his fingers to his cups those gems which the successful rival of jealous Iarbas used to put on the outside of his scabbard.' Golden cups inlaid with gems (φιάλαι λιθοκόλλητοι χρυσαί) are mentioned among the presents made to a favourite by the Persian king, Athen. II. p. 48 § 31.

7 when he has never been anywhere out of Attica] For ἡ πόλις, meaning, not Athens merely, but Athens with her territory, Attica, compare Ar. Peace 250: 'Poseidon. Woe to thee, Sicily! How wilt thou, too, perish!—Trygaeus. How that poor country (πόλις) will be carded to shreds!' So 'seagirt 'cities' for 'islands' Aesch. Eum. 77.—So far from having seen the wonders of the East, the boaster has not even crossed Cithaeron or passed the Isthmus. The Athenian feeling against unnecessary travel receives intense expression in Plato's Laws (XII. p. 950 A):—'It is the tendency of intercourse between cities to mix manners of the most various kinds, strangers inoculating each other with new-fangled notions (κατωροπίας ἐμπορεύων). Now this is likely to inflict upon a community well-governed under proper laws an injury more serious than any other; but to the majority of cities, as living under laws in no wise good, it is of no consequence that they are contaminated by welcoming strangers among themselves, and by flaunting forth (ἐπικωμάζοντας) in their own turn to other cities, whenever any man, young or old, takes a fancy for going abroad in any way or on any occasion.' It is then proposed (p. 950 D): 'In the first place, let no one under forty years of age be permitted to go abroad on any pretence whatever. Next, let absence from Athens on private affairs be permitted to no man: on public business, to heralds, embassies, and perhaps to some sacred missions.' Absence on military service is, of course, excepted. In the Crito, Socrates imagines the laws complimenting him on having never once left Attica on any private business (p. 52 B).

8 Antipater] The reference is probably to that period (322—318 B.C.) during which Antipater was absolute master of Athens. When Alexander went to Asia in 334 B.C. Antipater was left regent of Macedonia; and on the king's death in 323 he was reappointed to that post. A league of the Greek States, headed by Athens, was formed against him; and the Lamian war ensued. This was terminated by the Macedonian victory at Crannon in the autumn of 322. Athens, now helpless, accepted Antipater's terms; 12,000 of the poorer citizens were deported,—the richer remnant being little more than 9000; the leaders of the patriotic party, including Demosthenes and Hyperides, were banished; and a Macedonian garrison was quartered in the Peiraeus. In the following year (321) Antipater succeeded Perdiccas as supreme regent, and thus became actual head of the whole Macedonian empire. He died in 318, bequeathing the regency to Polysperchon. See c. XX., where there is a probable reference to the year 316 B.C.

9 privilege of exporting timber] from Macedonia, the great timber-market of Greece, to Athens. Xen. Hellen. VI. i. 11. 'Holding Macedonia, the country from which the Athenians import their timber, we shall of course be in a position to build many more ships than they can.' Compare the pseudo-Demosth. Speech 'On the Treaty with Alexander,' p. 219 § 28 (in reference to Alexander having asked leave to have some boats built at the Peiraeus): 'Of course it cannot be said that timber for shipbuilding is plentiful at Athens and has failed in Macedonia,—the country which supplies it on the cheapest terms to any foreigners who require it.' When Brasidas took Amphipolis in 424 B.C. one of the causes of the alarm at Athens was that that city was useful 'in sending them timber for shipbuilding' (Thuc. 4. 108).

10 free of duty] i.e. free of the Macedonian duty upon exports. It is improbable that Antipater would have interfered to remit the Athenian tax (two-per-cent, πεντηκοστή, Boeckh P.E. III. 4) on imports: besides this would have been called εἰσφορά, rather than ἐξαγωγή, ἀρελής. Compare Andocides de Reditu p. 21 § 11: 'I supplied your army at Samos—the Four Hundred having already seized the government here—with spars for oars, as Archelaus (king of Macedon 413—399 B.C.) was a family friend of mine, and allowed me to cut down and export as many as I pleased.'

11 in order that no person whatever may be able to traduce him further] He alleges, as his motive for declining the offer, his wish to avoid the denunciations of informers, who might accuse him of having too close relations with the Macedonian government. As Athens was at this time absolutely subject to Antipater, who had taken vigorous measures to clear it of all but Macedonian partisans, these fears may appear strange. But <sup>1</sup>a fact noticed by Plutarch shows that, heavy as was the yoke, enough of public spirit was stirring beneath it to cause at least a general impatience. In 319 B.C.—three years after the introduction of the Macedonian garrison—the Athenians were importuning (ἐνυγλύνων) Phocion to intercede with Antipater for its removal (Plut. Phoc. c. 30). In such a state of the public mind the reception of special favours from the regent might well be a dangerous distinction.

12 in presents to distressed citizens] On these charities, ἐπαραι, see c. V. note 5.

13 to set up the counters] See c. IV. note 10.

14 reckoning by sums of six hundred drachmas] 100 drachmas = 1 mina: 60 minas = 1 talent. The boastful man first states that he has given 'more than five talents' (about £1200) in charity. He then proceeds to verify his statement. Taking the counting-board, he arranges the counters in small groups to represent the items—'600 drachmas (= 6 minas, about £24) to A; one mina, £4, to B;' and so forth. When at last the items are cast up, they make a total of more than £2400, instead of £1200; and it becomes evident that his first estimate was prompted by excessive modesty.

15 trierarchies or public services] See c. XXIX. note 16.

16 the best horses] At Athens horses were in a special sense what Aeschylus calls them—'ornaments of wealth' (P. V. 474). The keeping of horses, especially for the great contests, seems to have been regarded as in a manner a duty which was incumbent upon rich men—their proper contribution to the public splendour. See Demosth. adv. Phaenipp. p. 1046 § 14: 'In one thing only can Phaenippus the defendant be proved to have shown public spirit towards you, judges: he is a good and spirited owner of horses (ἵπποτρόφος...φιλότιμος)'—where the irony does not disturb the fact that, in the popular view, this was public spirit. Compare Xen. Hipparch. I. 12: '(you may win over parents) by explaining this to them,—that their sons will be forced to keep horses, if not by you, by their fortune; but that, if they begin to ride under your auspices, you will deter them from giving extravagant or mad (μανικῶν) prices for horses.' Miltiades was 'of a house which kept four-horse chariots' (for the contests: Her. VI. 35). Some of the good breeds were branded in the flank (ἐν ἰσχίῳ, Anacr. 28. 2). The 'samphoras' and 'koppatias' (marked with the old letters san Ϻ and koppa Ϙ) are known from the Clouds 23, 122: and Strabo mentions a 'wolf' brand in Italy (v. i. 9). The 'koppatias' of Pheidippides cost 12 minas, about £48 (Clouds 23): the same sum is the value of a horse in Lysias de maled. p. 133 § 10. In the speech of Isaeus de Dicaeog. hered. the rival claimant is taunted thus: 'You have never possessed a horse worth more than 3 minas' (£12: p. 55 § 43).

17 the upholstery-mart] In that part of the Market-place where the frames (κλῖναι) of couches and beds were sold, the coverlets, rugs, pillows—everything included in the term ὑμῆτις, 'bedding'—could probably be bought too. Luxurious drapery for couches was a specially eastern luxury; thus, when Artaxerxes sent Themistocles 'a silver-footed bed and costly coverings,' he sent therewith 'a person to strew them; observing that the Greeks did not understand bedmaking' (οὐκ ἐπίστασθαι ὑποστρωννύειν, Athen. II. p. 48 § 31). In the Frogs (v. 544) 'coverlets from Miletus' are mentioned; the same which are said in the Georgics to be 'of great price' (III. 306). It was specially noted as a sign of the degeneracy of Spartan manners when they began 'to use coverings for their couches of the present large size and costly workmanship, superbly embroidered; so that some of the guests invited shrank from resting their elbows on the cushions' (Athen. IV. p. 142 § 20).

VII. THE MAN OF PETTY AMBITION.

1 Petty Ambition] Compare with this character what Aristotle says of the χαῖνοι, or Vain (Eth. N. IV. 3):—'They set themselves off with dress and outward show (σχήματα) and the like, and wish their advantages to be manifest, and talk about them, as if they expected to receive honour by means of these things.' But the μικροφιλότιμος does not necessarily, like the χαῖνος, overrate himself; he only overrates those things on which he founds his claim to honour. In ostentation, again, he resembles the ἀλαζών. But he places honour in the trifles which he really possesses; the ἀλαζών, in greater things which he does not possess. If some editors had not maintained that part of this chapter suits the ἄρεσκος (see Crit. App. VII. 1) it would have seemed needless to point out the wide difference between the characters. The complaisant man desires to be popular for what he is; the μικροφιλότιμος, to be admired for what he has.

2 placed next the host] Plutarch says (Quaest. Conv. I. 3. 1):—'Different places (at table) are honourable with different nations ... With the Greeks, the first. With the Romans, the last place on the middle couch, which they call the consular.' Here, as the context shows, 'the first' place, said to be that of honour among the Greeks, must mean the first on the first couch: and if Plutarch and Theophrastus are to be reconciled, it must be supposed that the host was second on the first couch. In Plato's Symposium, however, Agathon, the host, is placed on the last or lowest couch,—ἐσχάτος κατακείμενος (p. 175 C); as the Roman host was usually summus in imo (though in Hor. S. 2. 8. 20 medius in imo). Probably there was no invariable custom.—Contests for precedence at table supply Lucian with some good touches. See the Dialogues of the gods c. 13: 'Zeus. Cease, Asclepius and Heracles, quarrelling like men. These things are unseemly and improper at the dinner-table of the gods. Heracles. But Zeus, would you have this druggist recline at table above me?... Zeus. Cease, I repeat, and do not disturb our party... Heracles, you may well allow Asclepius to take precedence of you. He died first.'

3 to Delphi to have his hair cut] On entering his 17th year (Xen. Cyr. i. 2. 8) an Athenian boy became technically 'a youth,' ἐφηβος (though the δρακμαρία on his formal enrolment among the ἐφηβοί did not take place till the 18th year). His long hair was then cut off, and a lock dedicated (usually) to some river-god,—as Orestes, in Aeschylus, offers his to the Inachus (Cho. 6); the first-fruits of the living body being thus symbolically offered to water, 'nourisher of youth' (κουροτρόφος). Athen. xi. p. 495 § 88: 'Youths about to cut off the lock offer to Heracles a large cup filled with wine, which they call Oinisteria; and, having poured a libation, give it to the company to drink.' The old custom was to offer the lock to Apollo at Delphi—a place especially suitable to the rite in its inner meaning, since the abundance of water there was probably the chief reason for which Delphi was chosen as the central seat of worship (Curtius Hist. Gr. bk. II. c. 4). Compare Plut. Thes. c. 5; 'It being at that time still the custom that those who were passing out of boyhood into youth should go to Delphi and offer to the god a lock of their hair, Theseus went thither; and from him they say that a spot is still called the Thesea.'

4 an Aethiopian] The intercourse with the East then recently opened by Alexander's expedition had brought black slaves into fashion. Compare Alciphro's Letters (which refer to this period) II. 2. 5: 'From that moment he has not ceased sending me every kind of luxury,—dresses, gold ornaments, maids, footmen, Indians male and female.' In the Rhetoricā ad Herennium prob. of Cicero's age) the pretender to wealth directs his slave to borrow an Aethiopian, and come for him to the baths (IV. 50. 63).

5 his hair cut frequently] See c. XXIV. note 16,

6 anoint himself with unguent] Instead of using (at the baths or the gymnasium) plain olive-oil, he uses a thick perfumed unguent, χρίσμα. See Xen. Anab. IV. 4. 13 : 'Abundant material for unguent (χρίμα) was found in the place, which they used instead of olive-oil (ἀντ' ἐλαίου). It was obtained from hog's lard, sesame, bitter almonds, and terebinths. The latter supplied also a liquid perfume (μύρον).—In Xenophon's Symposium II. 3 the host proposes after dinner to send for μύρον. Socrates objects, observing that 'the olive-oil used in the gymnasium' is the only one which it befits a man to use.

7 the bankers' tables] A fashionable lounge. Plat. Apol. p. 17 c : 'Do not be surprised' (Socrates says) 'if you hear me defending myself in the same terms which I am wont to use in the market-place at the bankers' tables, where most of you have heard me.' Plutarch de Garrul. § 21 gives examples of the three kinds of reply which may be made to the question 'Is Socrates at home?' (1) The necessary; as 'Not at home.' (2) The polite; as 'Not at home; he is at the bankers' tables.' (3) The superfluous; as 'Not at home. He is at the bankers' tables, awaiting some Ionian strangers, for whom'—etc. etc.

8 where the young men take exercise] Besides the palaestras or wrestling-schools, Athens had at this time three large gymnasia, provided with wrestling-rooms, baths, grounds for running and javelin-practice, etc.—the Lyceum, the Cynosarges, and the Academy. These were open to persons of all ages; but separate parts were assigned to adults (i.e. persons above 20), ephebi (18—20), and boys. The ephebeum was a large hall with seats placed round it, opening off the colonnade which ran round the great court of the gymnasium. Here the best performances would generally be seen, and here, consequently, the man of petty ambition would find himself where he always desired to be—in the most popular resort.

9 near the Generals] In the Birds (794) Aristophanes mentions τὰ βουλευτικόν, 'the senatorial places' in the theatre near the orchestra; and in the Wasps (575) the Strategoi of that day are described as sticklers for their 'places of honour.' But it would seem that the seats for high officials were not very definitely marked off. See Demosth. in Meid. p. 572 § 178, where the παρεδρος or coadjutor of the archon lays hands upon a person who 'was taking possession of a place' (θέαν καταλαμβάνοντος) and attempts to expel him from the theatre. The incident shows that the public had access to the immediate neighbourhood of the official seats. In Plato's time a place in the 'orchestra-circle' could be obtained for 'a drachma at the most' (10d.: Apol. p. 26 E). Compare Hor. Ep. I. 1. 67:

Grow rich, grow rich by fair means or by all,
And view sad Pupius from a nearer stall.

10 Laconian hounds] A small breed of red dog (fulvus Laco, Hor. Epod. 6. 5), which the ancients supposed to have been got by a cross with a fox (Arist. H. A. VIII. 27). Pindar (frag. 73) speaks of 'the Laconian hounds, in chasing wild beasts keenest of all things that move;' Sophocles (Ai. 8) gives them the epithet 'true-scenting;' Virgil praises 'Sparta's swift small hounds' (Georg. III. 105). Compare the Midsummer Night's Dream IV. 1, 'My hounds are bred out of the Spartan kind...A cry more tunable Was never holla'd to nor cheered with horn In Crete, in Sparta, nor in Thessaly.'

11 Cyzicus] in Mysia on the Propontis; once a dependency of Athens. The treaty of Antalcidas (387 B.C.) gave it, with the other towns of Asia, to the Persian king. At the death of Alexander it fell under the government of Leonnatus; and on his death in 322 under that of Antigonus.

12 a satyr ape] a kind of short-tailed ape, to which the Greeks gave the name of tityrus. The Tityri, mythical companions of Dionysus, are sometimes identified with, sometimes distinguished from the Satyrs. There was also a kind of ape called σάτυρος (Ael. H. A. 16, 21: Plin. H. N. IV. VIII. 54, etc.): whether it was the same as the tityrus, does not appear.

13 Sicilian doves] Philemon, the comic poet (circ. 330 B.C.), praises Sicily, among other things, for its doves (Athen. XIV. p. 658 § 76). And Nicander (circ. 160 B.C.) is quoted in Athen. IX. p. 395 § 51 as saying, 'keep wheat-fed pigeons in thy house; or doves of Sicily, whom neither hawk nor falcon vexes.'

14 deer-horn dice] The ἀστράγαλοι mentioned here (tali) were numbered on four sides, the other two being round: the κύβοι (tesserae) on all six. Astragali, as the name implies, were properly knuckle-bones; here they are of the horn of the gazelle (δορκάς). In Athen. v. p. 194 § 22 it is said that the capricious temper of Antiochus Epiphanes used to show itself in the unequal value of his presents:—'to some he would give deer-horn a dice,—to others, dates,—to others, gold.' In Lucian Amor. c. 16 a disconsolate lover amuses himself by throwing (to obtain an omen) 'four dice of the horn of the African gazelle (Διβυκῆς δορκός).'

15 Thurian vases] 'Thurian' vases are not mentioned elsewhere. The peculiar shape meant by στρογγύλος is explained by the description of an olive-jar in Appuleius Flor. i. 9. 35 as 'onion-shaped' (lenticulari forma), 'round and squat' (pressula rotunditate = στρογγύλος).

16 walking-sticks with the true Laconian curve] The custom of carrying a walking-stick seems to have been regarded at Athens as especially Spartan. In the Ecclesiastusae (74) the women provide themselves with 'Laconian walking-sticks and men's dresses.' The fashion must have been common; for the invalid in the speech of Lysias (de Inval. p. 169 § 12) speaks of himself as 'using two walking-sticks, while other people use one.' The painter Parrhasius—a contemporary of Lysias—who affected personal splendour, is described as 'leaning on a cane studded with gold rings' (Athen. XII. p. 543 § 62). In Demosth. adv. Pant. p. 982, however, 'carrying a walking-stick' is mentioned as an offensive trait; either as suggesting an affectation of Spartanism, or as a mark of dandyism: see c. IV. note 8.

17 a curtain] a piece of tapestry hung on the walls of his dining-room. The tapestry which fell at the dinner-party of Nasidienus, and showered dust upon the table, was probably hung on the walls: Hor. S. 2. 8. 54. Horace speaks of 'the dinners of poor men without tapestries or purple': Od. 3. 29. 14.—The subject of the embroidery is a victory of Greeks over Persians; as the Painted Porch at Athens (c. I. n. 2) was 'frescoed with the trowsered Medes'; and as, in the Roman theatre (Virg. Geo. III. 25), 'Wrought on the gorgeous curtain, Britons rise.'

18 a little court with an arena] Xen. de Rep. Athen. II. 10: 'Rich men have in some cases private gymnasia and baths with dressing-rooms.'

19 ball-alley] Various games with the hand-ball were popular in Greece; and a public gymnasium probably always included a σφαιριστήριον. Horace tells us that he used to play 'the three-cornered game' (of catching the ball) before taking the bath: S. I. 6. 126.

20 to philosophers] for a conversazione, such as in the Protagoras takes place at the house of Callias; where Socrates finds Protagoras pacing the colonnades with his 'sacred band' (χορός) of disciples. Hippias and Prodicus are also there,—the latter quartered, so full is the house, in a store-room (Prot. p. 315 D). Plato's Callias is, in this respect, very much what the μικροφιλότιμος aspires to be. The arcades surrounding the court of a public gymnasium were fitted with seats (ἐξέδραι) and large semicircular benches (ἡμικύκλια) 'where philosophers, rhetoricians, and literary men in general could sit and converse' (Vitr. v. 11. 2).

21 to sophists] i.e. to professors of rhetoric. As rhetoric was the most important branch of the encyclopædic practical education which the 'sophists' professed to give, the term 'sophist' came to be more and more nearly identified with 'rhetorician;' until, under the Empire, it appears as its recognised synonym. Thus the rhetorician Libanius (circ. 340 A.D.) is expressly styled 'the Sophist.'—The miniature gymnasium was lent to the philosopher for a conversazione; it is lent to the 'sophist' for a formal declamation, or for one of those continuous florid expositions in which these professors loved to indulge. Compare Juv. VII. 39:

If to declaim is your aspiring bent,
Your patron's dingiest premises are lent.

22 drill-sergeants] who gave lessons in the use of the arms carried by the hoplite, i.e. the pike (δόρυ), the short sword, and the large oblong shield (ὄπλον). Thus they were not mere fencing-masters, but, like the Roman campidoctores, drill-sergeants. The scene of Plato's Laches is laid at the place where one of these men had just been displaying his dexterity (ἐπιδεικνύμενον, p. 171 E); and the professional teaching of drill for money is there, as in the Euthydemus p. 272 D, spoken of as something new. Athenaeus quotes a statement that 'scientific fence under arms' (ὀπλομαχίας μαθήσεις) was first taught by one Dameas of Mantinea (iv. p. 154 § 4). Compare Plut. an seni ger. s. resp. c. 18 p. 793 D: 'We do not leave our bodies absolutely without exercise when we can no longer use spades or jumping-weights (ἀλτήρες, to give an impetus), or throw the quoit, or fight under arms' (ὀπλομαχεῖν). To the Greek States, which (except Sparta) had only a militia subject to little constant discipline, the professional drill-sergeants would be useful: comp. c. x. note 3.

23 to musicians] Stratonicus, a contemporary of Theophrastus, is said to have been the first who made the advance from the playing of the cithara without any accompaniment (ψιλή κιθάρισις) to symphony (πολυχορδία), and took pupils in concerted music (ἁρμονικῶν), and constructed a score (διάγραμμα): Athen. VIII. p. 352 § 46. We ought probably to understand ἁρμονικοί here of this symphony-playing—then a novelty.

24 the skin of the forehead] For the meaning of the Greek word, see Her. VII. 2: 'They had upon their heads the forehead-skins (προμετωπίδια) of horses, flayed off with the ears and mane.' The skin of the victim's forehead is hung up, with garlands round it, over the doorway leading from the vestibule (πρόθυρον) into the court of the house. Compare, for the form of the ostentation, Ar. Acharnians 989: 'He has thrown out these feathers before his door as a sample of his fare' (i.e. to inform passers-by that he has had game for dinner).

25 a procession of the Knights] The 1200 knights, commanded by the two Hipparchs and by the ten Phylarchs of the tribes, paraded publicly on several occasions. These occasions were chiefly of three classes: (1) the great festivals, especially the Panathenaea, to which the Chorus of Knights in Aristophanes allude, saying that their fathers were 'worthy of the robe' Kn. 566): and the Dionysia, Xen. Hipparch. 3 § 2. (2) Certain periodical reviews, held, according to Xenophon, in four places,—in the grounds of the Lyceum; in the grounds of the Academy; in the hippodrome; and at the port of Phalerum: Xen. Hipp. 3. 1. (3) Special occasions of public rejoicing or mourning, when the goddess on the acropolis was to be thanked or entreated.—The Roman Knights had but one annual ceremony corresponding to this; the transvectio, on the ides of July, to the temple of Castor in the forum from the temple of Mars without the wall.

26 putting on his cloak] In the procession a mantle (χλαμύς), instead of the ordinary cloak, was probably worn,—purple and embroidered' acc. to the Schol. on Ar. Knights 566; as the Roman Knights paraded in the trabea or toga with purple stripes. The μικροφιλότιμος does not shock public taste by walking about in this. He resumes his ordinary cloak (ιμάτιον), and leaves the clinking of his spurs to hint the circumstance of which he is vain.

27 his little Melitean dog] Plin. H. N. III. 26; 'Next comes Corcyra, called Melaena (the Black), between which and Illyricum is Melita, from which Callimachus (circ. 280 B.C.) states that the little 'Melitean' dogs take their name.' The Black Corcyra is now Curzola; and this Melita is the long, narrow island S.E. of it, now called Meleda, in N. lat. 42, close to the eastern shore of the Adriatic. On these islands see Sir G. Wilkinson's Dalmatia and Montenegro, I. p. 257. This old account preserved by Pliny is more to be trusted than Strabo's (vi. 2) remark that Malta was the home of the breed,—a natural guess. 'Melitean' dogs had all the privileges of the modern lap-dog. In Lucian de merced. cond. § 34, a lady requests a philosopher to carry 'Myrrhine:' 'It was absurd to see the little dog peeping out of his cloak just under his chin, and barking in her small voice (such is the Melitean breed), and licking the philosopher's beard.' One of Alciphro's Letters expresses a slave's terror at the accidental poisoning of 'Plangon, the little Melitean dog which we keep as a tame pet for the mistress' (III. 22).

28 a scion of Melita] The master desires to proclaim that his dog was of the choice Melitean breed; and this he does in a characteristically high-flown phrase. Compare with κλάδος the poetical use of ἔρνος, θάλος, ὄζος, πτόρθος. On the conjecture καλός for κλάδος, see Crit. App. VII. 5.

29 a brass ring] Probably one of those which were worn as amulets, and which were supposed to have a protecting, or, for the sick, a healing virtue. The invalid, having recovered, dedicates to Asclepius the ring which, by the god's blessing, has helped to cure him. Compare Ar. Plutus 881: 'Informer. Where have you got this cloak? Just Man. I do not care for you; for I wear this ring which I bought from Eudemus for ten-pence. Inf. But there is no charm against an informer's bite.' Clemens Alex. Strom. I. p. 334 B: 'Excectus the tyrant of the Phocians used to wear two charmed rings (γεγοητευμένους), and could discern from their clink against each other the right moments for action. He died, however, by the hand of an assassin; though not before the clink had warned him, as saith Aristotle in his Polity of the Phocians.'

30 in the temple of Asclepius] The Athenian Asclepieum stood on the slope of the acropolis at the S.W. corner: Paus. I. 21. 4. Plutarch, inquiring why the Roman temples of Aesculapius are always outside the city walls, observes that 'the Greeks have their temples of Asclepius placed on open and tolerably high ground; and that his great Hellenic shrine—that at Epidaurus—was at some distance from the town (Quaest. Rom. § 94 p. 286 D). This circumstance may have assisted the efficacy which a brief sojourn at the god's temple was supposed to have for invalids: Paus. II. 27. 63.

31 daily burnishings and oilings] See Crit. App. VII. 6.—The μικροφιλότιμος, having dedicated a ring which, like that in Aristophanes (see n. 29), is worth perhaps tenpence, visits the temple daily in order to see that it is kept in a state creditable to the donor.

32 from the presidents of the Senate] Public sacrifices on behalf of the state were frequently offered by the Senate of Five-Hundred, the members of the presiding section (πρωτάεις) conducting the ceremony. The place was probably either the Prytaneum adjoining the Senate-House on the north side, or the Metroum (temple of the Mother of the gods) on its south side. That the occasions were frequent appears from Antipho de choreut. p. 146 § 45, where the duty of 'conducting rites (τερονποιεῖν) and sacrificing on behalf of the democracy' is spoken of as one which the prytanis had repeatedly performed during his five weeks of office.

33 the privilege of reporting the sacrifices] The more formal and systematic state-religion of Rome restricted the privilege of reporting the auspices (nuntiatio) to the magistrate who presided when they were taken; or to the augur who acted as his deputy. Here the μικροφιλότιμος obtains it as a personal favour; but, as appears from his address to the people, he was at least one of the fifty presidents of the Senate.

34 to the Mother of the gods] In her temple on the east side of the Market-place, immediately south of the Senate-House. Here were kept the graven tablets of the laws (Lycurg. in Leocr. p. 156 § 66) and the original drafts of the decrees of the Ecclesia (Aesch. in Ctes. p. 80 § 187). Athenio (afterwards leader of the Servile war) is said to have stolen some of these αὐτόγραφα from the Metroum during a popular tumult (Ath. v. p. 214 § 53).

35 receive ye her good gifts] A regular formula. See no. 54 of the προοίμια, or exordia for public speeches, ascribed (though improbably) to Demosthenes:—'Our (senatorial) province has been duly discharged for you. We have sacrificed to Zeus the Saviour, to Athene, and to Victory; and these sacrifices have been fair and prosperous for you. We have sacrificed also to Persuasion and to the Mother of the Gods and to Apollo; and here also the sacrifices were favourable...Receive, therefore these blessings at the hands of the gods.'

36 a smart white cloak and wreath] Aesch. in Ctes. p. 468 § 77 (speaking of the joy shown by Demosthenes at the death of Philip):... 'Though his daughter was but a week dead, before he had mourned for her or discharged the fitting rites, he put on a garland, clad himself in white, and proceeded to offer burnt sacrifice.'

VIII. THE LATE-LEARNER.

I Late-learning] The man described here is one who, from whatever cause, was prevented in his youth from acquiring those accomplishments which were included in the Greek idea of a liberal education, and which belonged to one or other of its two higher branches,—'music' and 'gymnastics.' He comes in later life into the society of people with whom his early education places him at a disadvantage; and a sense of this makes him ambitious to repair the defect. Instead, however, of taking up self-culture at the point and in the branches which mature years prescribe, he falls into the error of M. Jourdain. He attempts to start afresh; to acquire, by sudden application, things which must be learned early and gradually; and which, even if they could be learned to good purpose now, demand more time than a man ought to spend in sacrificing to the graces.

Just as, in the man of Petty Ambition, the love of honour is made mean by a low estimate of what is honourable, so in the Late-Learner the desire γῆράσκειν πολλὰ διδασκόμενος is made absurd by a wrong choice of studies. The best point in the character is its respect for culture; the weakest, its pride in accomplishments which seem precious because they have long been admired from a distance.

These were the ideas ordinarily conveyed by the word ὀψιμαθής,—a term analogous, from one point of view, to 'pedant.' Timaeus called Aristotle ὀψιμαθὴ σοφιστήν, 'a pedantic sophist,' for presuming to criticise the Locrian polity (Polyb. 12. 9. 4). Gellius notes the tendency to bring in new or obsolete words in writing and speaking as 'a vice of late-learning, which the Greeks call ὀψιμαθία' (xi. 7. 3). 'You know how insolent,' says Cicero, 'are late-learners' (Fam. 9. 12. 2). In ridiculing the taste for interlarding Latin with Greek, Horace himself sets an example of abstinence, by paraphrasing into seri studiorum the term for which his own language supplied no equivalent (S. I. 10. 21).

2 passages for recitation] See c. <sup>III.</sup>XV. note 6.

3 'Right wheel,' 'left wheel'] To turn towards the right was to turn 'towards the spear-hand; to the left, 'towards the shield-hand' (or, for cavalry, ἐπὶ ἡνίαν, 'towards the bridle-hand'). Thus Xen. Cyr. VII. 5. 6, μετεβάλλοντο ἐπ' ἀσπίδα, 'they wheeled to the left.' Xenophon often uses the phrases in reference to slantwise marching: e.g. ἐπὶ δόρυ ἡγεῖσθαι, to lead one's men on their own right (Anab. IV. 3. 26). See his Lacon. Resp. 11. 8: 'The Lacedaemonians do with the greatest ease even those things which drill-sergeants consider most difficult. When they are marching in column (ἐπὶ κέρως), one section (ἐνωμοτία) of a company is, of course, behind another. Now, if at such a moment, the enemy appear in front in phalanx, the word is passed to the commander of each section to form in front, coming up upon the left (εἰς μέτωπον παρ' ἀσπίδα καθίστασθαι).'

4 at the festival of a Hero] Because no festival common to all the Heroes is mentioned by Greek writers, this allusion has been treated as obscure. But each of the Heroes had his own festival; and it is enough to understand a reference to any one of these. Such were the Theseia at Athens, the Aiaceia at Aegina, the Aianteia at Salamis, the Diocleia at Megara. The terms in which Thucydides mentions the honour paid to Brasidas at Amphipolis imply that an annual festival, ἑορτή, was always celebrated in memory of a canonised Hero (V. 11). In Plutarch's praecepta de ger. resp. c. 15 § 7 a man is spoken of as 'giving the banquet in some festival at a hero's tomb' (ἡρώα δειπνῶν ἐπιταφίου τινός); and probably where tradition pointed to the grave,—as in the case of Eurystheus, buried at Pallene near Athens, Eur. Her. 1031,—the festival would be held there. Compare the honours paid by Alexander to the tomb of Achilles at Sigeum, Arrian I. 11.

5 for a torch-race] The most probable account of the torch-race is that it was contested by two or more parallel chains of runners; along each a torch was passed; and the runners of that chain which carried its torch most quickly to the goal were collectively the winners. The length of the course at the great festivals was about half-a-mile. True to his principle of beginning at the beginning, the Late Learner does not compete with the ἐφηβοί, but enters for the boys' race.

6 to a temple of Heracles] Small chapels or shrines of Heracles were probably numerous in Attica,—his worship being associated with that of Theseus. See Plut. Thes. 35 'Theseus, on his release (from Hades, by Heracles), returned to Athens; and all those sacred enclosures (τεμένη) which were formerly his, and which had been set apart for him by the city, he consecrated to Heracles, and called, instead of Thesea, Heraclea.' The same legend is given by Euripides, H. F. 1327, where these sanctuaries are spoken of as existing 'throughout the land' (πανταχοῦ χθονός). Heracles had also an altar in the outer Cerameicus: Paus. I. 30 § 1.

7 seize the ox] The ὀψιμαθής has been invited by a friend to assist at a sacrifice. Eager to display his strength, he throws off his cloak and seizes the head of the victim,—drawing it back so as to expose the throat to the knife. So Il. I. 459, 'they drew back the head and cut the throat' (ἀνέρυσαν καὶ ἐσφαξαν). The word τραχηλίζω was used of a wrestler seizing his adversary by the throat, and bearing back his head: Plut. de curios. 12, 'See the athlete with his neck in the grip of a boy' (τραχηλιζόμενον).—There is no special fitness in the sacrifice of the ox to Heracles; it was the ordinary victim at a sacrifice of the more costly kind: see c. VII. A bull was probably the peculiar victim in the worship of Heracles and Theseus,—the two bull-slayers of legend; and it was also one of the three animals (suovetaurilia) offered to the Heroes generally: see Diod. IV. 39.

8 palaestras] He scorns the promiscuous company at the gymnasia, and goes to the palaestras, the regular wrestling schools: see c. XIX. note 4.

9 at a conjuror's performance] See c. XVI. note 6. The conjuror's entertainment is here varied by songs. It has been proposed, but needlessly, to read θεάματα, i.e. 'stage plays.'

10 Sabazius] On this character of Dionysus see c. XXVIII. note 10.

11 to acquit himself best] In the Speech de Corona Aeschines is described as assisting his mother in the mystic ceremonial by which she professed to purge guilt; instructing the candidates when to rise from their knees, and prescribing the formula which they were to recite: (p. 313 § 259.) The candidate for initiation in the rites of Sabazius is anxious to be perfect in a lesson of this kind.

12 on a tenth-day festival] On the tenth day after birth a child received its name, the parents holding a sacrifice (δεκάτην θύειν) and entertaining their friends. Peisthetaerus in the Birds replies to the begging poet who pretends that he has long sung the praises of the new Cloud-city, 'Have I not this very moment held its tenth-day festival, and named it like a child?' One of the objects of entertaining a large company on this occasion was similar to that which was served by the wedding-feast—viz. to secure witnesses in case the legitimacy of the child should afterwards be disputed: see Demosth. Adv. Boeot. de nom. p. 1001 § 22, Isaeus de Pyrrhi her. p. 45 § 70.

13 to play the flute with him] The ὀψιμαθής aims at distinction in the two especially liberal branches of Greek education; gymnastics and music. The Roman feeling (under the Republic at least) that there was something unmanly in being skilful on a musical instrument was very different from the Greek. Aristotle speaks of such skill as 'worthy of a free man, and honourable' (ἐλευθέριον καὶ καλὴν: Polit. VIII. 3). In Plato's Laws it is recommended that a boy should have music lessons from the age of thirteen to that of sixteen (p. 809 E).

14 play at tableaux vivants] Nothing whatever is known as to the nature of the amusement called μακρὸν ἀνδριάντα παίζειν: nor is the text certain: see Crit. App. VIII. 5. Ast proposed to read παλεῖν: 'he will fence at a tall dummy'—the ἀνδριάς serving the purpose of the wooden post at which Roman swordmasters taught their pupils to cut and thrust: 'Who has not seen the wounds of the post?' Juv. VI. 247. As this exercise could scarcely be competitive, Ast wished to transfer τὸν αὐτοῦ ἀκόλουθον to the next clause. Coray read μικρὸν ἀνδριάντα πιέζειν: 'he will press a statuette between his hands (to harden them).' This curious interpretation was suggested by a passage in Diog. Laert. (VI. 23), which says of Diogenes the ἑνὶν that, to harden his frame, he used 'to roll on smooth sand in summer, and in winter to embrace statues covered with snow.'

15 archery and javelin-throwing] Both these were among the exercises of the gymnasium; but they were esteemed in very different degrees. Archery was not a subject of contest at the great festivals; and the bowmen of Greek armies in historical times were usually of an inferior social grade, at Athens, Scythian slaves, at Sparta, Helots (Xen. Hellen. iv. 5). Javelin-throwing, on the other hand, was one of the five exercises of the pentathlon at the great contests, and was therefore systematically practised from boyhood. One of Antiphon's speeches turns on a case of a boy having accidentally shot another 'while practising the javelin with his fellows at the gymnasium' (Tetral. II. 3 § 3).

16 to take a lesson from him] Compare Plutarch de fort. Alex. II. c. 1: 'Philip, also, was in these things (jealousy of professional artists) smaller and more puerile than his true self, because his accomplishments had come late (ὕπ' ὀψιμαθίας). Thus they say that when he was once wrangling with a harper, about the execution of a passage, and fancied that he was confuting him, the man smiled quietly and answered, 'Far from you, O king, be the degradation of understanding these things better than me.''

17 at the bath] See c. XIV. note 12.

18 that he may appear educated] The popular Greek ideal of a good education is expressed in Plato's Theages p. 122 E: 'Did not your father have you educated in the same things in which all other gentlemen's sons (οἱ τῶν καλῶν ἀγαθῶν υἱεῖς) are educated—for instance, letters, harp-playing, wrestling, and other exercises?' Arist. Polit. VIII. 3, 'There are chiefly four branches of education—letters, gymnastics, music, and (in some cases) painting...for painting, also, seems useful in enabling one to judge better of artist's work.' It is interesting to compare the popular with the higher Greek conception of 'the educated man.' Aristotle says (Eth. IV. 1. 3) that to the consideration of every subject may be brought two valuable things—first, special knowledge (ἐπιστήμη), and secondly, 'a sort of educatedness' (οἶον παιδεία τις). The man of special knowledge is the arbiter of fact; the 'educated' man is the critic of method. So in Plato's Erastae (p. 135 D) it is said that the philosopher is able, as becomes 'a freeborn and educated man,' to follow the statements of the special artist (δημιουργός) better than the general company can; and Socrates observes that this makes the man of culture, like the pentathlete, 'a sort of second-best all round' (ὑπακρόν τινα περὶ πάντα: p. 136 A).

IX. THE UNSEASONABLE MAN.

I Unseasonableness] This, in its general sense, includes another character described by Theophrastus,—that of περιεργία, Officiousness. But between Unseasonableness in its strict sense and Officiousness there are two points of difference. The unseasonable man does the wrong thing at the wrong time; the mistake of the officious man consists either in doing a thing (in itself opportune) too well, or in undertaking it when it is beyond his power. The officious man always acts with a kind purpose, and has his attention habitually directed to the needs of others: the unseasonable man blunders chiefly through thinking too exclusively of himself.

2 serenade] The 'comastes' was not always the midnight reveller armed with 'flambeaux and levers and bows that threaten the barred doors' (Hor. Od. 3. 26. 6). Sometimes he is merely the prototype of the modern serenader. Such is the 'comastes' in Theocritus (III. 1); such the player of the 'quavering flute' against whom Horace warns Asterie (Od. III. 7. 20.) Compare Lucian Marin. Dial. 1. 4. 'Galatea. Polyphemus is quite musical too. Doris. Oh, Galatea! We heard his singing when he went to serenade you the other day' (ὅποτε ἐκώμασε πρῶτην ἐπὶ σε).

3 cast in a surety-suit] Sureties were required by Athenian law in two cases chiefly: (1) in public causes, for the appearance of the accused on the day of trial. If he failed to appear, his surety became liable to the penalty for contempt of court; and, in consideration of the risk run, the surety was allowed to hold the bailee in confinement till the day for his appearance (Xen. Hellen. 1. 7. 35, ἐδέθησαν ὑπὸ τῶν ἐγγυησαμένων). (2) In public and certain private causes, surety was taken for the satisfaction of the judicial award. If the principal made default, his surety was liable for the money, and was sued in a 'surety-suit' (ἐγγυῆς δίκη). But this responsibility was limited to one year from the time when the principal's liability was incurred (Dem. adv. Aphat. p. 901).

4 he will inveigh against womankind] He does this in their presence; for the wedding-feast was the one entertainment in which Greek manners permitted respectable women to take part. Plato proposed that the statutable wedding-party should consist of twenty persons, ten of either sex (Laws VI. p. 775 A). At the wedding-feast described by Lucian, the women, with the bride, are placed on one side of the table, the male guests on the other (Symp. cc. 6 ff.).

5 and incurring expense] Since, after a sacrifice, it was usual to entertain friends : see c. XV. note 2.

6 assisting at an arbitration] As an advocate of one of the two parties : see c. II. note 3.

7 who is not yet drunk] The Roman 'nemo saltat sobrius' implied that dancing was altogether incompatible with the dignity of a freeborn man. This was not the Greek feeling. The remark in the text only means that dancing, the ultimate expression of joy, is absurd when a man dances in cold blood. Cf. Athen. XIV. p. 629 :—'Well says Damon the Athenian that songs and dances must come when the soul is at all stirred. Liberal and beautiful souls impart the same qualities to their dances and songs ; souls of the opposite kind, the opposite. Wherefore also the saying of Cleisthenes the despot of Sicyon was witty, and the sign of a cultivated understanding. Having seen, as they say, one of his daughter's suitors dance in a vulgar manner—it was Hippocleides the Athenian—he said that "he had danced off his marriage," deeming, as it seems, that the soul of the man resembled his dancing.' (Cf. Her. VI. 129.) 6

X. THE OFFICIOUS MAN.

1 Officiousness] The desire to please, either by rendering an extraordinary service or by performing an ordinary one unusually well, is present in every act ascribed to this character. 'Officiousness' therefore seems to render it better than the more literal 'Overbusiness,' which is too harsh. The distinction between ἀπερκεία and περιεργία scarcely needs to be pointed out ; the good-will in the latter case is honest, not affected, and the exaggeration is due simply to an error of judgment. Compare c. IX. note 1.

2 mixing more wine] The wine and the water were usually mixed together in the bowl, and thence poured into the cups of the guests. The οἰνοχόος was the ladler-out of the wine ; and οἰνοχόη was the ladle used for that purpose. Athenaeus however quotes a poet who had written on the subject, and from whom it appears that this was not always the case : 'No man' says Xenophanes 'would in mixing his glass first pour in the wine : the water comes first, and the wine on top of it' (Ath. XI. p. 782, § 18).

3 his commanding officer] Here we have the undisciplined zeal, as in c. XXVII. the uncontrollable terror, of a badly-trained militiaman. Touches like these well illustrate the character of the Athenian military force—one which it shared with that of every Greek state except Sparta. Xenophon says with truth that the Spartans alone were ‘true artists in war; the other Greeks, hasty amateurs (αὐτοσχέδιασται) in campaigning’ (Lac. Polit. 13. 5).

4 when he means to give battle] Compare Plutarch Demetr. c. 28: ‘It is said that when Demetrius was a boy he asked his father (Antigonos) when they were to march. Antigonos replied in anger: “Are you miserable lest you should be the only person who does not hear the trumpet?”’

5 what is to be his order] The present tense implies in Greek a certain obsequiousness which makes the indiscreet zeal more absurd.—παραγγέλλειν ‘to pass the word,’ which the commander gives to his lieutenants and they to their subalterns. The περίεργος must be supposed to be a brigadier commanding (as ‘taxiarch’) the infantry or (as ‘phylarch’) the cavalry of his tribe.

6 a deceased woman's tombstone] Casaubon doubted whether γυναικός meant the man's own wife; but, to say nothing of the fact that her husband is mentioned among those who were estimable, this would have been τῆς γυναικός or τῆς αὐτοῦ γυναικός: see XVIII., XXIII., XXIV., XXVIII. Some relative of the περίεργος is meant, whose funeral it devolved upon him to superintend.

7 the name of her husband] It may be inferred from this passage that it was usual at the time to write upon a woman's tomb merely her own name,—with perhaps that of her husband, if she had been married, or of her father, but not both. There is a very evident emphasis upon γυναικός: the strangeness of the fuller inscription consists in the fact that the tomb is a woman's. The same feeling which placed a woman's glory in the absolute silence of her life (Thuc. II. 45) may have suggested—what, indeed, it made inevitable—that her tombstone should say little. Plato was legislating for his own sex only, when he permitted tombstones to record ‘the praises of the deceased in not more than four heroic verses’ (Laws xv. p. 958 E). Pausanias notices it as peculiar at Sicyon that ‘they add no inscription, but after simply stating the name of the deceased, without intimating his descent (οὐ πατρόθεν ὑπειπύοντες), bid Farewell to the dead' (II. 7. 3).

XI. THE UNPLEASANT MAN.

1 Unpleasantness] The epithet 'harmless' (ἀνευ βλάβης) with which the 'annoyance' given by the character is qualified, seems merely an attempt by the composer of the Definition to indicate that λύπη, 'pain,' is not to be understood in a material sense. Thus the Shameless man, for instance, does not merely offend the taste, but sometimes inflicts positive damage, βλάβη, — as on the butcher from whom he steals tripe. The Unpleasant man on the other hand—says the Definition—is annoying in an aesthetic sense only.

The outlines of this Character are not firmly drawn; the traits which it includes do not seem distinctly referable to any one dominant moral quality: it is altogether a slight sketch, put together from observations and impressions which have not been thoroughly sorted or analysed. It has elements in common with at least three characters which are elsewhere treated separately and fully:—1. The Unpleasant man is unseasonable. He disturbs a friend's sleep that he may talk to him, and keeps a ship waiting while he takes a walk. 2. He is boastful; as when he speaks of his cistern and of his cook. 3. He is gross, i.e. a coarse jester; as in the question which he addresses to his mother.

No one of these tendencies is strongly marked; but they are so blended as to form a whole which would, in English phrase, be most nearly described by Ill-breeding; meaning thereby a want of tact which is not accidental, but is due to a defect, natural or engendered, in sure good-feeling.

2 cistern-water] The remark is ἀηδής as being boastful; and perhaps also as suggesting thin potations. The female legislator in the Ecclesiastusae (154) proposes 'that no publican be allowed to construct cisterns in the wine-shops.' Athenaeus tells a story—preserved by a brother dramatist—of Diphilus. The comic poet is dining out, and compliments his host upon the coolness of the wine:—

'Your cistern must be admirably cool.'

'Yes; we take pains to ice it—with your prologues.'

(Ath. XIII. p. 580 § 43).

3 the pierced cask] In Lucian's Dialogues of the Dead (XI. 4) the shades of two philosophers converse mournfully on the uselessness of instilling truths into minds which have no power to retain them :—'It was just the case of these daughters of Danaus, for ever refilling the sieve-like cask.'

4 will show off the qualities of his parasite] He draws attention, at his own table, to the appetite of his parasite,—incites him to buffoonery,—and in short, displays him as one of his possessions. The abject condition of the professional Athenian parasite is vividly set forth in Alciphro's Letters,—who, in this as in other things, seems to have drawn upon the poets of the Middle and New Comedy. The parasite is described as ever hesitating between two evils—on the one hand, gaunt hunger—on the other, not indignities merely, but blows, cuffs, all manner of ill-usage from his patron and his patron's guests (III. 6, 7, 49). His position is unbearable : he thinks of taking to the road with a band of brigands who lie in wait at the Scironian rocks for travellers to Corinth ; he attempts small parts at the theatre, and implores his brother parasites to come and applaud ; he even tries country life ; but it is in vain ; he always relapses into the old dilemma between starvation and maltreatment (III. 70, 71). The parasite in Plautus and Terence holds, if not a higher, at least a safer position.

The word 'parasite' is said to occur in a bad sense first in a fragment of Arāros (Ἀραρός) the son of Aristophanes, whose first piece, acc. to Suidas, was acted in Ol. 101 (376—372 B.C.: Meineke frag. com. ed. Bothe p. 466). In older times 'parasite' was a term of honour, meaning a person appointed to assist the magistrates in celebrating sacrificial feasts, and otherwise called δυνάσθιος: Athen. p. 234 § 26.

XII. THE OFFENSIVE MAN.

1 Offensiveness] The appropriation of the word δυσχέρεια to the special sense which it bears here is remarkable. It is perhaps the strongest example of a characteristic common in some degree to all these sketches—that they treat general terms simply in reference to the particular meaning, however arbitrary, which the social usage of the day had fixed upon them : see c. III. note 1. It may be accidental, but seems worthy of notice, that twice in the Philoctetes of Sophocles δυσχέρεια is used precisely in the sense to which it is restricted here—when the sufferer speaks of the annoyance which his malady must cause to those with whom he sails : vv. 473, 900.

2 rancid oil] Compare Juvenal v. 88 :—

Your humbler sauceboats know the grosser oil
Which came in wherries from Jugurtha's soil;
Which helps the Moor to bathe in peace at Rome,
And guards his countrymen from snakes at home.

3 a thick tunic] He wears the lightest summer mantle over such a tunic as is worn only in winter. Aristophanes in the Birds (714) speaks of the time when—

The swallow brings us news,
'Tis time to sell the winter cloak and buy the summer blouse :
and Horace of the man who wears—

In June a cape, a jersey when it snows.

(Epp. i. xi. 18.)

XIII. THE STUPID MAN.

1 Stupidity] In Eth. N. II. 7 Aristotle observes that there is no proper name for those who care too little about pleasure ; but proposes to call them insensible (ἀναισθητοί). The word is used here in a general meaning, of one whose 'perceptions' are slow. All the phases of this slowness described by Theophrastus have a common characteristic,—inattention to the immediate present. It is because the ἀναισθητος is seldom thinking of what he is doing at the moment that his actions leave no stamp upon his memory, and that he forgets an engagement just formed. For the same reason, when social pressure hurries him into speaking or acting on the instant, he is apt to say or do mechanically something which does not suit the occasion.

2 after doing a sum] In c. VI. it is said of the Boastful man that, when sitting in a public place among strangers, he will ask one of them to 'set up the counters' (θεῖναι τὰς ψήφους) in order to verify a boast which he has made. These two passages seem to show that people sometimes carried about a 'ready reckoner' in the shape of a small ciphering-board (ἀβάκιον), like that used by an arithmetic master (calculator) at Rome : Mart. x. 62. 4.—See c. IV. note 10.

3 when he is defendant in an action] The preliminary investigation of the case before the archon is over ; a day has been appointed for it to come before a court; but, before this day (ἡ κυρία τοῦ νόμου, Dem. Meid. p. 544 § 93) arrives, the Stupid man forgets the whole matter, and leaves Athens. The consequence is that judgment goes against him by default.

4 in order that he may come to the house] The duty of a relative or friend was not merely to attend the funeral (ἐκφορά); he was also expected to visit the house at least once while the corpse was laid out (πρόθεσις). Not to take part in the 'mourning' (τὸ κῆδος) then made, was thought unfeeling neglect: Isocr. Aegin. p. 390. See Demosth. adv. Macart. p. 1071 § 64, 'These female relations he invites both to be present at the laying out of the dead, and to follow him to the grave.' Plut. de Consol. ad Ux. c. 3, 'This also is mentioned with surprise by those who visited the house (οἱ παραγεγνημένοι, i.e. during the πρόθεσις), that you have not put on mourning...nor was there any show of splendour or pomp about the burial.' So in the Andria i. 1. 79 the mourner often (frequens) visits the house of death.

5 will call witnesses] as if he were making, instead of receiving, a payment. Compare Dem. in Phorm. p. 915 § 30, 'I suppose you all know that (these men) borrow with few witnesses, but call many when they pay.'

6 cucumbers] In the Peace (1001) Trygaeus prays 'that the marketplace may be full of good things—large garlic, early cucumbers, apples, pomegranates.' But the Stupid man forgets that it is not even spring yet.

7 make his children wrestle] Through mere dull inadvantage he incites his children to continue their violent exercise long after signs of fatigue have begun to appear. Athletics filled a large place in the life of a Greek; but his instinct for moderation in this as in other things is often marked. See Plato's Erastae p. 133 E (where Socrates wants to show that polymathy is not philosophy), 'Pray, now, do you consider that in the gymnasia heavy work (φιλοπονία) is athleticism (φιλογυμνασία)?' Aristotle says that gymnastic science is the knowledge of the moderate in toil: Eth. N. i. 6. 4.

8 and run races] Eur. Medea 46 'Here come in my children from their races'—ἐκ τρόχων, where a variant is ἐκ τροχῶν (τροχός) 'from their hoops.' Mr Sheppard understands τροχάσειν here of trundling hoops: but elsewhere the word always means to run races. An anonymous critic suggested τροχίζειν: but this (though supported by the analogy of σφαιρίζειν) does not occur in the sense of 'driving a hoop.' Probably the word for that would have been κρικηλατείν, or perhaps τροχηλατείν,—certainly not τροχιάζειν, as Ast suggests.

9 when it is raining] See Crit. App. XIII. 4. The point concealed under the corrupt text is probably of the kind which the most intelligible of the restorations affords. The ἀναίσθητος makes one of his verbal blunders. Ussing supposes the general sense to have been: 'When it rains he praises the fine weather, and does things which can be done only when it is fine.' But probably even the ἀναίσθητος, if (for instance) he went out to dig, would discover that the weather was unpropitious.

10 the Sacred Gate] Sulla, in 86 B.C., broke into Athens by levelling 'that part of the wall which is between the Peiraic and the Sacred Gate,' and the ensuing massacre in the neighbourhood of the agora 'spread over the whole Cerameicus within the Dipylum' (Plut. Sulla 14). The Dipylum, also called the Thriasian Gate, was on the N.W. side of Athens; the Peiraic was on the S.W.; the Sacred Gate was probably between them, and was so called because it led (as did also the Dipylum) to the Sacred Road to Eleusis. Now the Outer Cerameicus, upon which the Sacred Gate, as well as the Dipylum, would thus open, was the cemetery for those who were honoured with public burial. See the Birds, 395.—'The Cerameicus shall receive us: for, in order that we may have a public funeral, we will tell the Generals that we died in battle with the enemy in Bird-land.'—For a discussion of the reading 'Ἡρίας πύλας, see Critical Appendix XIII. 5.

11 I only wish that you or I had as many] The Stupid man, in absence of mind, answers as if he had been asked (for instance) 'How many minas do you suppose that Glaucon is worth?' Thus inadvertently he speaks words of fearful omen; for he associates death with himself and with his questioner by a wish. For a precisely similar instance of ἀναίσθησία betrayed into δυσφημία, see Plutarch Crass. 19: 'And from Crassus himself, as he was addressing the soldiers, fell an utterance which agitated and appalled them. He directed them to break down the bridge over the river, in order that no one might return. And whereas he ought, when he perceived the strangeness (δρονίαν—a euphemism) of the phrase, to have recalled and explained it to those whom his words had terrified, he neglected through obstinacy to do so.'—For the form of the expression ὁσοὶ ἐμοὶ γένοιτο, cf. Theocr. XVI. 19, αὐτῷ μοί τι γένοιτο 'give me pelf for myself.'

XIV. THE BOOR.

1 Boorishness] The sense of ἀμαθία in the Definition is illustrated by Eur. Med. 223, 'harsh to his fellow-citizens from want of culture' (ἀμαθίας ὕπο).

The selection of the Rustic as a definite type is remarkable. Small as Attica was, the line of demarcation between town and country life was sharply drawn. As Athens grew in wealth, the richer part, indeed, of the country population were more and more attracted to it; and Isocrates, speaking in 380 B.C., can already contrast his own time with the days when 'the houses and establishments in the country were handsomer than those within the walls, and when many of the citizens did not even come to town for the festivals' (Areop. p. 150 § 52). But there remained a frugal farmer-class, strongly conservative of the old simplicity, totally strange to the life of the city, and rarely—in some cases, never—visiting it. A vivid picture of this class—probably derived in part from the Greek comic dramatists—is given in the Letters of Alciphro, of which the imaginary writers belong to the age of Theophrastus. The temptations which beset the rustic on his visits to Athens are forcibly described. A farmer sends in his son to sell wood and barley; the young man sees a philosopher at the Academy, and to his father's dismay comes back a Cynic (III. 40). Another, having been sent in to buy earthenware, is betrayed into a ruinous carouse; a third, after disposing of his figs and nuts, goes to the theatre, and is thrown into ecstasies of wonder and terror by a conjuror (III. 17. 20). The rareness of such visits is also marked. In one letter a young Attic farmer requests a neighbour to be his guide in a first visit to Athens; he longs to see 'what this thing may be which they call town' (III. 31). In another, a son implores his mother to 'come and see the splendours of the town before her dying day;' for, though distant but a few hours' journey, she has never seen them (III. 39).

It was from the intellectual, quite as much as from the aesthetic side, that an Athenian viewed Rusticity. Aristotle calls the man incapable of a joke—the opposite extreme to the Buffoon —ἄγροικος, a Rustic ; and when he afterwards changes his word, it is only to substitute for it another (ἄγριος) which expresses in a still stronger form the result of living too much in the country. The sketch which Theophrastus gives us is so far defective that it contrasts rusticity, not with town intelligence, but merely with town elegance.

2 a posset] The κυκεών was a sort of thick posset, made with wine, barley-meal, grated cheese, and honey, and sometimes flavoured with thyme. The rustic carries the fragrance on his breath into the Ecclesia.

3 his shoes too large for his feet] In the Knights (317) Cleon is accused of having sold bad shoe-leather 'to the country people;' so that 'before they had worn the shoes a day, they were too large by a couple of spans.' Compare Hor. Sat. I. 3. 30 ; 'He may be laughed at because he is shaved in a somewhat rustic fashion—because his toga falls to his heels—because the loose shoe will hardly cling to his foot.'—Cf. c. I. note 7.

4 talks confidentially to his own servants] Greek manners, unlike Roman, permitted familiarity with slaves. After telling a story to illustrate the fear in which a Roman slave stood of his master, Plutarch adds,—'but the Attic slave will tell his master as he digs the terms of the last Convention ; so perfect is their familiarity' (de Garrul. 18). Xenophon says :—'We have given to our slaves the right to talk like equals (ισογυρία) with freemen, just as to resident-aliens the right of so talking with citizens ;' and he explains the indulgence by the fact that in a naval state, which requires the personal service of its citizens, the industries must be in the hands of the slaves, who will grow rich, and must then be kept in good humour (de republ. Ath. I. 12).—The Rustic's rusticity consists, then, not in conversing with his slaves, but in conversing with them on important matters, which, with a surly reserve, he withholds from his own family.

5 hired labourers] Slavery did not altogether swamp the labour-market. Poor men, chiefly foreigners, found employment as artisans, farm-labourers, or domestics : see Plat. Rep. 371. Lysis, in Plato's dialogue, says that his father's chariot was driven at the games by a hired charioteer (Lys. p. 208 E), while the groom mentioned in the same passage is a slave. The shrine of Eurysaces in the Market-place is mentioned by Pollux as the place at which 'those who ply for hire used to congregate.'

6 when he sees an ox or an ass or a goat] Compare Earle's Character of a Plaine Country Fellow:—'His mind is not much distracted with objects; but if a good fat Cowe come in his way, he stands dumbe and astonisht, and though his haste be never so great, will fixe here halfe an houres contemplation.'

7 will drink his wine rather strong] Temperate drinkers always put more water than wine into the bowl. Five parts of water to two of wine appears to have been a favourite mixture (Athen. x. p. 426. § 28). In a fragment of one of the comedies of Eupolis the Wine-God is thus greeted on his appearance—

Hail, Dionysus: are you 'Five-and-two?'

Hesiod (Op. 594) recommends three parts of water to one of wine,—the mixture which in Horace (Od. III. 8. 13) the Graces are said to approve. As to stronger compounds, a poet in Athenaeus (II. p. 36 § 2) says—

Half-wine half-water is a maddening drink;
Wine without water brings paralysis.

The Spartan Cleomenes was supposed to have gone mad through having learned from the Scythians to drink wine neat (Her. VI. 84).

8 the dog] The house-dog which kept watch in the hall. In Ar. Lysist. 1213 the servant at the door warns importunate visitors to 'beware of the dog.' The arrival of a welcome guest is thus described in some verses quoted by Athenaeus (I. p. 3 § 4):—

First, the hall-porter is all smiles—the dog
Wags a pleased tail—and some one hastes to set
A chair, unbidden.

9 if he has lent his plough] It is impossible not to be struck by the frequent allusions in these sketches to loans between neighbours of things used in housekeeping or farming. Thus the Penurious man (XXIV.) is one who 'forbids his wife to lend salt, or a lamp-wick, or cummin, or verjuice, or meal for sacrifice, or garlands, or cakes;' cf. cc. XV., XXIII., XXVI. Such touches remind us that the social life of Attica was, in the best sense, homely; and of the saying of Pericles, that Athenians understood φιλοκαλεῖν μετ' εὐτελείας. Compare Xenophon Mem.

II. 2. 12. 'Well,' said Socrates, 'and do you not wish to be on good terms with your neighbour, that he may give you a light for your fire when you want one?'

10 salt-fish] As fresh fish was the favourite delicacy at Athens, so salt-fish was the cheapest and commonest food. While Dicaeopolis, in the Acharnians, having made peace for himself, is preparing to dine on pheasants and thrushes, Lamachus ruefully provides himself with the fare of a campaigner—onions and salt-fish (Ach. 1100). There were shops expressly for its sale in the marketplace (c. XVI.), and it was also sold at the city-gates (Ar. Knights 1246). Cargoes of salted thunnies, mackerel, etc., were imported from the Hellespont and the Euxine: Athen. III. p. 116 § 85.

11 hides] διφθέραι were sometimes worn by country people. A rustic in the Clouds (72) is described as 'clad in leather, driving in his goats from Phelleus.'

12 the New-Moon] The first of the (lunar) month was fair-day at Athens. Ar. Wasps 171: 'I want to sell my ass; for it is new moon.' Knights 43 'this man bought a slave at the last new moon.' A public sacrifice, at which the archon presided, was held on the acropolis on this day. Demosth. Aristog. I. p. 800 (urging the jury to be true to their oaths) 'How (else), when you go up to the acropolis at the new moon, can you pray the gods to bless Athens and to bless each one of you?'

13 will sing at the bath] At the public baths, no less than in the streets or at the theatres, manners were on their trial. The term 'Triballians,' which Demosthenes uses in the general sense of 'roysterers,' meant especially, according to one old lexicon, those who behave with ill-breeding at the baths. The Shameless man (XV.), the Offensive man (XII.), and the Late-learner (VIII.) all make the baths a place for the display of their characters. The Rustic sings in mere gaiety of spirit. Horace complains of more deliberate offenders:—'Some recite their works in the forum; not a few at the bath' (Sat. I. 4. 75): and Martial says of an irrepressible reciter—'I fly to the baths—you still buzz at my ear' (III. 44. 12.). Seneca too reckons among the nuisances of those resorts 'the man who likes to hear his own voice:' (Ep. 56). One of the temptations may have been the vaulted roof.

XV. THE SHAMELESS MAN.

1 Shamelessness] The clause in the Definition—‘for the sake of base gain’—is significant. It is the key, as will presently be explained, to the special and limited sense in which Theophrastus considers Shamelessness. Compare the pseudo-Platonic Definitions p. 416: ‘Shamelessness is a state of mind tolerant of ignominy for the sake of gain.’

Shamelessness in its general sense—‘the not-shrinking from doing disgraceful things’ (Eth. N. iv. 9)—comprehends three characters described by Theophrastus: 1. Shamelessness (ἀναισχυρία) in his special sense: 2. Recklessness or the Abandoned character (ἀπόνεια): 3. Grossness (βδελυρία). We will attempt to discriminate these; having regard, not to the ideas which the terms might or ought to convey, but merely to the positive sense in which Theophrastus has used them.

(1) His Shameless man, then,—whom it will be convenient to distinguish as the man of Shrewd Effrontery—is one who is restrained by no scruple from committing those small injustices for which there is a practical impunity. He is not at war with society; he does not outrage it by any grave misdemeanour, or even by any eccentricity so violent that a brazen jocularly cannot carry it off. The strength of his genius lies in this,—that, while he is habitually guilty of sharp practice in his dealings with the world, and while he knows that the world knows it, he is able to suppress every trace of consciousness that he is not generally respected and beloved. The first trait given by Theophrastus is the most expressive. He dines out at a time when he was socially bound to be dispensing instead of receiving hospitality. But, instead of betraying embarrassment, he gaily assumes the licence of a privileged and especially popular guest.

(2) The Reckless or Abandoned man (ἀπονενομημένος) is also shameless. But, whereas the man of Shrewd Effrontery represses, for the sake of gain, an instinct of shame probably feeble from the first, the Reckless man has fiercely cast off a sense of shame which may once have been fine. The breach between him and his self-respect is complete and irreconcilable, transforming his whole character, and driving him into grotesque forms of self-insult. The man of Shrewd Effrontery is on good terms with the world; the Reckless man is a social outcast.

(3) The Gross man differs from the other two chiefly in this, —that he stands morally on a higher, æsthetically on a lower level. He does 'shameless' things neither, like the man of Shrewd Effrontery, with a view to advantage, nor, like the Reckless man, in a sort of desperation; but naturally, with the relish of a coarse nature for monstrous jests, which seem to him the more humorous if they extort signs of disgust. But, if he is in more violently bad taste, he is less immoral than the other two; for his offences are less voluntary, and, on the whole, of a lighter kind. He does not defraud his neighbour, like the man of Shrewd Effrontery; nor, like the Reckless man, leave his mother to starve.

2 when he has been sacrificing] As in Homeric, so in later times a sacrifice was usually followed by a feast. Thus, in one of Antipho's speeches, a man has a sacrifice to perform to Zeus Ctesius in the Peiræus: he makes it the occasion of giving a farewell dinner to a friend who is about to sail (de Venef. § 16). The sacrifice in honour of any domestic event, e.g. the naming of a child, or an athletic victory (δεκάτην, νικητήρια θύειν)—always implied the entertaining of friends. After public sacrifices, in like manner, the people were feasted (Isæus de Astyph. hered. § 21), a regular portion of bread and meat being given to each person (Plut. Symp. II. 10. 7). To hold a sacrifice without giving a dinner would have been thought inhospitable; to dine out on the same day, shameless.

3 calling up his attendant] A Roman custom allowed the guest to hand to his slave, stationed behind him, delicacies which he wished to reserve for use at home: see Athen. IV. p. 128 § 2, where, at an elaborate wedding-banquet, the slaves in attendance on their masters carry baskets, which are soon filled. But on ordinary occasions it was thought ill-bred to use this privilege: see Lucian's Symp. c. 2, Hermot. c. 2; Martial II. 37. And there is no proof that the custom was tolerated at all by earlier Greek manners: at Rome it may have been connected in origin with the client's dole. Here the Shameless man is of course represented as taking an unusual liberty. A similar trait is mentioned of the Avaricious man, who, at a club dinner, asks for a dish for his slaves (c. XXXVI.).

4 in marketing] See c. XVII. note 6.

5 when he has taken places at the theatre] Having his house full of guests, perhaps at one of the festivals, he takes a certain number of places for a series of performances at the theatre. His visitors pay for the tickets; but, on the first day, he contrives to go himself in the place of one of them; and, emboldened by success, brings on the second day his children and their 'pedagogue' in the room of others. In Plato's time a place in the best part of the house—i.e. in the tiers nearest the orchestra—seems to have cost about a drachma (loc. cit.: Plat. Apol. Socr. p. 26 E). The ordinary price of admission was two obols,—rather more than 3d.,—which the state furnished to poor people at the festivals. Foreigners probably had to take their places through citizens; and foreign women at least seem to have been restricted to a particular part of the house. In a fragment of Alexis the women complain, 'we have to sit at the theatre in the back rows, as if we were foreigners' (ξένοι: Alex. frag. 25. 1 Meineke).

6 and borrow barley] See c. XIV. note 8.

7 the coppers in the baths] for heating the water. A shower-bath was sometimes taken by having water dashed over the head; and this office was performed by the bathman. See Plat. Rep. I. p. 344 D, 'Thrasymachus now thought of going, after having, like a bathman, dashed his discourse over our ears in a full torrent.' The Shameless man does this for himself, and thus finds a pretext for depriving the attendant of his fee.

XVI. THE RECKLESS MAN.

1 Recklessness] On the difference between this character and those which precede and follow it, see c. XV. note 1. The term ἀπορροημένος contrasts a former with an actual state; before a man can be desperate he must have hoped. The Definition fails to mark this; but the Character marks it throughout. It is the picture of a person who has gone from bad to worse, until he retains just so much remembrance of a more respectable self as serves to give him a frantic pleasure in insulting his own dignity. He is ready to be even a crier or a cook; a statement which shows how advantageous is the original position supposed for the now Reckless man. The ideas conventionally attached to the words ἀνόνοια, ἀπορροημένος will be seen from Demosth. in Aristog. I. p. 780 § 32: 'Do you not see that in his policy there is no calculation, no restraining sense of honour (αἰδώς), but that recklessness (ἀνόνοια) is its guide? Or rather, his policy is utter recklessness,—that worst of evils to the man upon whom it comes, a thing terrible and cruel to all,—to the State, intolerable. For the reckless man (ὁ ἀπονενημένος) has given himself up,—has no care for the safety which calculation can ensure,—and prospers, if he does prosper, against expectation and against probability.' Plutarch makes callousness to ill repute the essence of ἀπρόνοια (Alcib. 13. 4).

2 being proof against abuse, and capable of giving it] The aor. λουδορηθῆναι is here, as in Demosthenes, deponent, having an active sense, 'to revile:' see Crit. App. XVI. 1. The Reckless man cannot only listen unmoved to reproaches (κακῶς ἀκοῦσαι), but can retort them.

3 to dance the cordax] The author of the Clouds, taking credit to himself for the propriety of his muse, instances some things which she has eschewed. Among these it is specified that she has 'never mocked bald men, nor danced the cordax' (540).

4 sober] Cf. Demosth. Olynth. II. p. 23 § 19: 'The rest of (Philip's) court consist of brigands and flatterers and such-like persons, capable of dancing, when intoxicated, dances which I would rather not name to you.'

5 without a mask] Demosth. de Falsa Legat. p. 433 § 287: 'men at the very sight of whom you would cry out—the blackguard Nicias and the execrable Curebion, who plays comic parts in the procession without the mask' (i.e. at the Dionysia). Observe the article: the (indispensable) mask.

6 at a conjuror's performance] Jugglers, puppet-showmen and the like travelled about to the fairs and festivals at towns. Plutarch compares persons who circulate absurd opinions to men 'dragging about a sort of conjuror's apparatus and booth (πυλαίαν) on their backs' (de fac. Lunae 8). In Plato's Republic (VII. p. 514 B) the wall over which the prisoners in the cave see images flit is compared to the 'screens which conjurors set between themselves and the spectators, over which they show their tricks.' Sometimes they were allowed to perform in theatres (Athen. I. p. 19 § 16: Alciph. III. 20). The tricks were of the established type—bringing fire out of the mouth (Athen. IV. p. 129 § 3), swallowing knives (Plut. Lyc. 20), making pebbles pass from one cup to another, or producing them from the mouth or ears of a spectator (Alciph. III. 20).

7 the free-pass] τὸ σύμβολον appears to mean a token or ticket given by the conjuror to his friends, or paid for, before the performance commenced. Compare Ar. Plut. 278, 'why do you not go?—Charon offers you your ticket' (τὸ σύμβολον δίδωσι)—with allusion to the tickets given to jurymen when they entered court, and on presenting which they received their pay.

8 an innkeeper] The unpopularity of innkeepers arose partly, no doubt, from the general feeling in ancient Greece against taking money for hospitality; but they were also infamous, as a class, for extortion. See a curious passage in Plato's Laws XI. p. 918 D: 'On this account (eagerness for gain) all the lines of life connected with retail trade, commerce, inn-keeping, have fallen under suspicion and become utterly disreputable...A man opens lodgings, for the sake of trade, in a lonely place, a long way from anywhere. He receives bewildered travellers in barely tolerable quarters, or affords warmth, quiet, and rest in his close rooms to people driven in by angry storms. And then, after receiving them as friends, he does not provide them with hospitable entertainment in accordance with that reception, but holds them to ransom,—like captive enemies whom he has got into his clutches,—on the most exorbitant, unjust, rascally terms. It is these offences, and others like them, shamefully common in all such callings, which have brought discredit upon such ministration to men's need.' But though it was discreditable to keep, it was not so to frequent an inn. The Athenian ambassadors to Philip stay at inns (Dem. de F. Legat. p. 272); and Dionysus in the Frogs (114) inquires which are the best inns on the road to Hades.

9 a tax-farmer] Andocides de Myst. p. 17 § 133:—'Agyrrius became chief-farmer of the two-per-cent. tax two years ago, buying it for thirty talents; and had for his partners the whole set who muster under the white-poplar' (the spot at Athens where the tax-contracts were sold); 'you know what they are like.'

10 a crier's] The Homeric 'herald' was also ambassador, 'messenger of Zeus and men' (Il. I. 334); his office was sacred and his person inviolable. The house of the Heralds at Athens were the priestly representatives of this bygone dignity. But the modern 'herald'—the crier who made proclamation in the Ecclesia or in the market-place—seems to have been on a level with the Roman praeco. Speaking of the shifts to which poor poets are reduced, Juvenal says: 'Others have not thought it too low or base to become criers' (VII. 5).

11 a cook's] The meals of an Athenian household were usually prepared by the female slaves; only on special occasions was a man-cook hired from one of the shops in the Marketplace in which the business of professed cook was combined with that of butcher. When Aristippus was reproached with employing a professional orator in a lawsuit, 'Well,' he answered, 'and when I give a dinner-party I hire a cook' (Diog. II. 72). The earliest mention of a man-cook as part of the establishment is said by Athenaeus to have occurred in a writer who lived about 280 B.C.: Athen. XIV. p. 658 § 22. Commenting upon the luxury brought in at Rome by the Asiatic conquests, Livy says: 'Then it was that the cook, esteemed and treated by the ancients as the vilest of slaves, began to be prized' (XXXIX. 6).

12 he will gamble] Aeschines in Timarch. p. 8 § 53: 'He spent his days in a gambling-house, where the fighting-stage (ἡλίσια, a board with a ring chalked upon it) is set out, and they match fighting-cocks, and play at dice.' Alciph. III. 54: 'Perhaps you will ask me why I am crying, or how I came to have my head broken, or why this flowered cloak of mine is torn to tatters? I won at dice. Would that I never had! What business had I to match my weak self against sturdy young men? No sooner had I swept all the stakes on the table towards me, and broken their bank, than they made a general rush at me. Some pounded me with their fists, others used stones, others tore my clothes. I clung fast to my money, determined to die rather than give up to them any part of my winnings. Well, for a time I made a good fight of it, standing the showers of blows, resisting the wrenching fingers, and sitting still like a Spartan who is being flogged on Orthia's altar. At last, however, I grew faint, and allowed the ruffians to take their plunder.'

13 will neglect to maintain his mother] Loss of civil rights was the legal penalty for proved neglect of parents. Aeschin. in Timarch. p. 4 § 28: 'And whom did our lawgiver condemn to silence (in the Ecclesia)? Evil livers. And where does he make this clear? 'Let there be' he says 'a scrutiny of the public speakers, in case there be any speaker in the Ecclesia who is a striker of his father or mother, or who neglects to maintain them or to give them a home.' Solon, however, enacted that 'no son should be compelled to maintain a father who failed to have him taught some trade' (Plut. Sol. 22).

14 will be arrested for theft] The Greek term ἀνάεσθαι implies that the man is caught in the fact and taken at once before the Commissioners of Police ('the Eleven'). According to the letter of Athenian law in the time of Demosthenes theft was a capital crime in three cases: 1. theft to the value of more than 50 drachmas, or about £2: 2. theft to the value of more than 10 drachmas (8s.) from the gymnasia, the baths, or the ports: 3. theft of anything by night (Dem. in Timocr. p. 736 § 113).

15 some public gathering] πανήγυρις is a word of general meaning. He chooses for his displays a time when Athens is full; either a market-day or a festival. As the great festivals were occasions of buying and selling, πανήγυρις seems, at least in later Greek, to have meant especially the fair coincident with a festival: see Paus. X. 32. 9 (describing a festival in Phocis): 'On the last of the three days they hold a fair (πανηγυρίσουσι), selling slaves, and, indeed, all beasts of burden.'

16 excusing himself on oath] He is concerned with law-suits in one of three capacities,—as defendant, as plaintiff, or as witness. In the last case he sometimes attends the courts, bringing a mass of papers; but he sometimes makes oath that he knows nothing of the matter. This was ἐξόμνησθαι. Those who, when cited, refused either to give evidence or to take this oath, were liable to a fine of 1000 drachmas. Demosth. in Neaer. p. 1354: 'I call Hipparchus himself before you. I will compel him to give evidence, or to excuse himself on oath according to law.'

17 in the breast of his cloak] which was worn deep, and served as a bag or purse. Theocritus says, speaking of the niggardly spirit of the age, 'Everyone keeps his hand in the bosom of his robe' (i.e. guards his pockets closely: XVI. 17).

18 to be a captain of market-place hucksters] i.e. to be patron and subsidizer of the retail-traders (κάπηλοι) who kept taverns and eatinghouses in the market-place, and who were, as a class, in bad repute. He lends them small sums with which to carry on their business, and goes the round of their shops to levy his interest. He has himself been described as ἀγοραῖος τῆς.—See Crit. App. XVI. 6.

19 twopence halfpenny a day] The drachma = 6 obols : this is therefore 25 per cent. a day. Compare Plaut. Epid. 1. 1. 5: 'He actually borrowed this money from a usurer at Thebes on daily interest,—a sesterce for every silver mina.' Taking the mina at rather more than £4, and the sesterce at 2*d.*, this would be about 74 per cent. a year. Menippus, the Cynic, 'was a moneylender by the day, and was called the day-lender' (ἡμεροδανειστής : Diog. VI. 99).

20 the cookshops] Isocrates implies that in his time the shops of this kind in the market-place had a better class of customers than formerly: for he says that then 'no decent servant, even, would have thought of eating and drinking in a tavern' (Areop. p. 149 § 49). See, however, the story in Plutarch Demosth. 60:—'Diogenes once saw in a tavern Demosthenes—who was ashamed and shrank back. 'The more you shrink back,' he said, 'the more you will be in the tavern.'

21 thrusting into his cheek] Ar. Eccl. 818: 'I had been selling grapes, and came back with my cheek full of copper coins.'

22 upon their gains] ἀπὸ τοῦ ἐμπολήματος, 'out of their receipts from what they sell:.' ἐμπολᾶν meaning not merely 'to buy,' but 'to gain by traffic.' Isaeus de Agn. hered. p. 88 § 43: 'Besides these he left furniture, cattle, barley, wine, fruit, by which they made (ἐνεπόλησαν) 4900 drachmas.'

23 the workshops] See c. XVII. note 7.

XVII. THE GROSS MAN.

1 Grossness] βδελυρός, in its graver sense, was nearly equivalent to Blackguard. But it was used also in a lighter sense, to describe that kind of coarse buffoon whom Aristotle calls βωμολόχος (Eth. N. II. 7. 13). See Plato's Republic p. 338 D, where Thrasymachus says, in reference to his opponent having used what he considers an extravagantly unfair illustration, βδελυρός εἶ, ὃ Σώκρατες,—'Socrates, you are a buffoon.' In this sketch the graver and lighter meanings are blended; but the latter predominates. It is impossible to find an exact equivalent in English. 'Buffoon' has acquired too polite associations. 'Blackguard' is, on the whole, too grave for the character intended here. 'Gross' appears least inadequate. It does not, indeed, interpret the humorous side of the character; but then neither does its Greek original,—the humorous sense attached to βδελυρός being conventional.

2 hiss the actors] A demonstrative Athenian audience did not always confine themselves to hissing. Demosthenes, taunting Aeschines with his ill-success on the stage, remarks that the tragic contests in which he used to take part were 'contests for his life,' from which he frequently came off 'with wounds' (de Coron. p. 314); i.e. he was pelted. Again, de Fals. Legat. p. 449: 'When he played the woes of Thyestes and the Trojan war, you drove him off the boards with your hisses, and all but stoned him to death.' Lucian describes an impersonation of Ajax so vivid that 'the whole house went mad at once along with Ajax,—they danced, shouted, tore off their clothes' (de Salt. 83).

3 when the Market-place is full] 'Full market' was an expression for the hours from about 9 A.M. to noon. See Her. IV. 181 (speaking of a spring in the oasis of Ammon): 'through the hour of dawn it is warm; at full market colder; noon comes, and it is intensely cold.' Again, III. 104: '(the Indians) have the sun hottest in the early morning,—not, like others, at noon, but from sunrise to the breaking-up of market' (i.e. midday, when people went home to a siesta: see c. XXIV. note 17).

4 myrtleberries] a favourite delicacy at dessert. Athenians, according to a poet in Athenaeus (XIV. p. 652 D), 'sing the praises of myrtleberries, of honey, of the portals of the acropolis, and fourthly of dried figs.'

5 will cry 'stop'] Terence alludes to this as a well-worn practical joke: Phormio v. vi. 7: 'Antipho. Hi, Geta! Geta (who is running in the opposite direction). There you go again. Is there anything new or wonderful in being called back when one has set out running?'

6 he will do his own marketing] The ordinary practice, except among the very poor, was to send a slave to market: see (for a somewhat earlier period) Xen. Mem. I. 5. 2: 'Would we take a present of such (a worthless slave) to be our attendant or our marketer?' It is observable that in these Characters the persons, besides the βδελυρός, who are named as marketing for themselves are the Shameless man (c. XV.) and the Penurious man (c. XXIV.); others have their provisions bought by slaves (cc. XIII., XXIII.). At the fishmarket, however, where the chief dainty was contended for, gourmands seem to have watched their own interests: Aesch. in Tim. p. 9 § 65, 'who is there among you who has not been to the fishmarket and seen what sums these people spend?' Alexis vividly describes a citizen haggling with a fishmonger for a pair of mullets (frag. XII. 2. Meineke).

7 a barber's or perfumer's shop] Lysias de inval. p. 170 § 20: 'Each man has his favourite lounge; one frequents a perfumer's shop, another a barber's, another a shoemaker's, and so forth; the most popular establishments being those nearest the Market-place.' Demosth. in Arist. I. p. 786 (describing an unsociable person), 'He never frequents any of the barbers' or perfumers' shops in the town, or indeed any of the workshops.'

8 to the soothsayer's] Some persons invoked assistance of this kind in very small domestic difficulties. See c. XXVIII.: 'If a mouse gnaws through a meal-bag, he will go to the expounder of sacred law.' Nicias, according to Plutarch, kept a prophet (μάντις) at his house, whom he used to consult 'ostensibly about public affairs; but chiefly, in fact, about his private concerns, and especially about silver-mines' (Nic. c. 4).

9 will use words of evil omen] His mother is seeking a revelation of the will of the gods; to utter, at such a moment, words which will offend them, is not only to thwart her prayer, but to expose her to their anger. To 'blaspheme,' in the Greek sense, was not merely to speak against the gods, but to speak, when they were deemed present, as at a sacrifice, of any dismal subject, distasteful to the bright and gracious visitants. Clytemnestra complains that the lamentations of Electra prevent her from sacrificing to the gods; Philoctetes is left on Lemnos because his cries of pain make offerings and libations unavailing (Soph. El. 632, Phil. 8). See the striking passage in Plato's Laus (VII. p. 800 B): 'Suppose, I say, that when a sacrifice had been performed and the victims duly burnt, some individual, the man's son or perhaps brother, standing near the altar and oblations, should break into all manner of ill-omened words—should we not say that his utterances would cast a gloom—a sense of whispered and foreshadowed evil—upon his father and upon all his house?'

10 will drop his cup] A bad omen,—what the Romans called caducum auspicium. When Crassus was on his fatal march into Armenia,—a march discouraged by many omens,—a sacrifice was held soon after crossing the Euphrates ; when the augur handed to Crassus the liver of the victim, he dropped it. 'Then, seeing that all present were deeply troubled, he said, smiling, 'Such is old age ; but at all events no arms shall be dropped'' (Plut. Crass. 19).

XVIII. THE GARRULOUS MAN.

I Garrulity } The epithet 'ill-considered' in the Definition embodies the distinction drawn by Theophrastus between Garrulity and Loquacity. It is a difference, not of quantity, but of quality. The Loquacious man is possibly able ; he is certainly ambitious ; it is his tendency to treat a subject in a large manner, with copious, if not always apt, illustration. The Garrulous man is necessarily weak ; talking is, with him, not an ambition, nor exactly a pleasure, but rather an acquired physical need ; and, being neither inventive nor logical, he can neither rise out of the the tritest topics nor pursue any one of these. Loquacity wearies, Garrulity irritates ; the one—as Theophrastus says—induces sleep ; the other, fever.

The specimen of Garrulity given in this chapter seems not inartistic. It is characteristic, as has been said, of the Garrulous man that he is incapable of pursuing a subject,—his remarks being either wholly unconnected, or connected by an inadequate link, the chain in the latter case being seldom long. Now the discourse in the text shows both the absolute and the feebly-disguised solution of continuity. The topics are :—1. His wife ; suggesting his dream upon the bed of which she is the partner. 2. His dinner (absolute change of subject). 3. The Inferiority of the moderns (do.). 4. The Cheapness of wheat in the market-place (do.) ; suggesting (i) the Strangers seen there ; who suggest (ii) the Dionysia, for which they may have come ; and this (iii) the Navigable Season ; leading to (iv) the Crops, and (v) his own Farming-plans, which remind him of (vi) the Difficulty of living, and (vii) the Good-fortune of Damippus, who could afford so great a torch at the Mysteries ; these suggest (viii) Temples generally, especially the Odeum.—5. His indisposition yesterday (absolute change of subject). 'Yesterday' suggests (i) To-day, and what day of the Month it is ; which suggests the Calendar generally, and so (ii) the Festivals which are its landmarks.

2 after the Dionysia] i.e. the 'great' Dionysia. The four festivals of Dionysus fell in four successive months: 1. The 'Rural' in December: 2. the 'Lenaea' in January: 3. the 'Anthesteria' in February: 4. the 'great' or 'city' Dionysia in March. About this time sets in the northern etesian; followed each day, after the sunset lull, by the south-breeze now called the 'embates.' 'Never, except in the short winter season, is there any uncertain irregularity in wind and weather; the commencement of the fair season—the safe months, as the ancients called it—brings with it an immutable law followed by the winds in the entire archipelago; every morning the north-wind arises from the coasts of Thrace, and passes over the whole island-sea' (Curtius, Hist. Gr. trans. Ward i. p. 14). With it came the merchants 'flying over the sea in spring-time like birds of passage to all foreign cities' (Plato Laws XII. p. 952 E). It was the special pride of Athens that, unlike some other cities, she excluded no foreigner, not even enemies, from anything which she could teach or show (Thuc. II. 39).

3 set up a very large torch at the Mysteries] The Lesser Mysteries of Demeter were celebrated at Athens at the end of February; the Greater at Eleusis at the end of September. These lasted nine days. On the fifth, a procession of the fully-initiated (ἐπόπται) and of those initiated in the Lesser rites (μύσται) walked from Athens to Eleusis, carrying torches, and led by the torch-bearer (δαδούχος). They remained there two days; on the sixth night the mystae became epoptae; next day they returned to Athens. It seems probable that, on the evening of the fifth or 'torch' day, there was at Athens a sort of illumination, when those who did not go to Eleusis burned torches before their doors. These torches symbolised the search of Demeter for Persephone; precisely as the lamps burnt at the night-festival (λυχνόκαϊα) at Sais symbolised the search of Isis for Osiris, and were burnt throughout Egypt on that night before the houses of those who could not attend the festival (Her. II. 62).

4 the Odeum] An odeum or music-hall resembled a theatre in its semicircular form, but differed from it in being usually roofed for the sake of sound. Athens had three such buildings:—1. The Odeum of Pericles, which is probably the one meant here; built about 440 B.C. at the S.E. corner of the acropolis. It had a pointed roof, said to be in imitation of the tent of Xerxes ; in the interior 'many seats and columns' (Plut. Per. 13).

 2. The Odeum near the fountain Callirhoe by the Ilissus ; older, according to Hesychius, than the theatre of Dionysus, i. e. than 500 B.C. On one occasion 3000 hoplites were called together in it: Xen. Hellen. II. 4 § 9. 3. The Odeum built about 150 A. D. at the S. W. corner of the acropolis by Herodes Atticus, and called after his wife the 'Odeum of Regilla.' It was the largest in Greece, the interior diameter being about 240 ft. (Paus. VII. 20 § 3).

5. the Apaturia] Between the Mysteries in September and the 'Rural' or local celebrations of the Dionysia in December fell in October the Apaturia; a festival kept in nearly all Ionic cities, and having for its objects (1) the recognition of a common descent from Ion, and, through him, from his father Apollo, whom Ionians worshipped as Apollo Patrous: (2) the maintenance of the ties of clanship subordinate to this common tie; children being then enrolled in their father's 'phratría.'—Ephesus and Colophon alone, whose inhabitants claimed to be the purest Ionians, were forbidden by a religious scruple to celebrate it (Her. I. 147).

XIX. THE LOQUACIOUS MAN.

1 Loquacity] It is well defined as 'incontinence (ἀκρασία) of talk,' for, while Garrulity drops its unconnected remarks with dull persistence, Loquacity is fluent and eager. Compare Ar. Frogs 838: 'a mouth unbridled—intemperate (ἀσπαρές)—of which the gates stand ever wide.'—See c. XVIII. note 1.

2 Do you tell me so? don't forget, &c.] i. e. 'You astonish me: take care that you do not involve yourself in a self-contradiction.' See Crit. App. XIX. 1.

3 he will go into the schools] Aeschines (in Timarch. p. 2 § 12) quotes an ancient law providing for the strict privacy of schools. 'Let it not be lawful for those above the age of boys to enter (the schools) while the boys are there, except for the son, brother, or son-in-law of the master; and if anyone enter contrary to this rule, let him be punished with death.' The very terms, however, in which Aeschines refers to this ordinance as embodying the old feeling on the subject imply that it had become obsolete.

4 the palaestras] here in the strict sense—schools of wrestling and boxing. ‘Gymnasium’ properly meant a place of more general resort and of more various resources, including grounds for running and archery, javelin-ranges, baths, &c.—Physical education probably began very early. Plato recommends that the distinctive discipline for boys and for girls should begin at six years of age—that of a boy with lessons in riding and in the use of the bow, javelin, and sling: ‘letters’ are to come at the age of ten (Laws VII. p. 794 C.) Aristotle thought that the active training of mind and body might begin at the seventh year (Rep. VII. 17).

5 the news from the Ecclesia] On the text see Crit. App. XIX. 4. The meaning probably is that, on the breaking up of the Ecclesia, the λαός obtains a summary of the debate from some one who was there, and retails it to others. At the time when these Characters were probably written, the number of Athenian citizens, i. e. of persons privileged to attend the Ecclesia, was comparatively small. The following measure had been taken by Antipater in 322:—‘Out of 21,000 qualified citizens of Athens, all those who did not possess property to the amount of 2000 drachmae were condemned to disfranchisement and deportation. The number below this prescribed qualification, who came under the penalty, was 12,000, or three-fifths of the whole. They were set aside as turbulent, noisy democrats; the 9000 richest citizens, the ‘party of order,’ were left in exclusive possession, not only of the citizenship, but of the city’ (Grote c. XCV.). The great mass of the population could, at such a time, learn the proceedings of the Ecclesia only by hearsay.

6 the battle in Aristophon’s year] The battle of Megalopolis in Arcadia, where a Lacedaemonian army was defeated by Antipater, regent of Macedonia during the absence of Alexander. This event is placed by Mr Grote (c. XCV.) in 330 B. C., Ol. CXII. 3, in which year Aristophon was archon (Clinton Fast. Hellen.). This is the usual explanation of the reference, and probably the right one. Mr Clinton, indeed, places the battle of Megalopolis in July 331 B. C.; and inclines to the view of Casaubon that ‘the battle in Aristophon’s year’ means the contest between Demosthenes and Aeschines in 330 B. C., when the latter spoke his oration Against Ctesiphon, and the former replied in the speech On the Crown. Were not Casaubon’s proposed change of τοῦ ῥήτορος to τῶν ῥητόρων a violent one, this ingenious view would have some probability. But it seems impossible that, without the help of τῶν ῥητόρων, μάχη could bear such a sense. The words τοῦ ῥήτορος are now usually bracketed as spurious. They were added by one who confused the Aristophon who was archon in 330 B. C., and who is otherwise unknown, either with (1) Aristophon of Azenia, who was dead in 330 B. C.: Aesch. in Ctes. § 139: or with (2) Aristophon of Collytus, also dead then: compare Dem. de Cor. §§ 162 and 75. Both were distinguished as politicians and speakers.

7. the Lacedaemonian victory] This is usually understood of Aegospotami, 405 B. C.: and there was no other battle 'in the time of Lysander' of sufficient importance to have been alluded to in this way. If the clause is genuine, the Loquacious man for once seems to degenerate into Garrulity. The comparatively recent battle of Megalopolis may have had some real connection with the political questions just discussed in the Ecclesia; but why he should go on to speak of an event so remote as the fight at Aegospotami,—unless because this was a battle also, and one in which the fortune went the other way,—does not appear.—See Crit. App. XIX. 6.

8 a greater chatterer than a swallow] Dionysus in the Frogs (93) describes the swarms of chattering poetasters as 'colleges of swallows.' Virgil, too, calls the swallows 'garrulous' (Geo. IV. 307). There were other proverbs for loquacity: see Alexis in Athen. IV. p. 133 § 10:—

Not tailed cicada, jay, or nightingale,
Not turtle-dove or grasshopper can match
Thy chattering.

XX. THE NEWSMAKER.

1 News-making] The character described here is that of a maker, not merely a monger, of news. A deliberate impostor, not merely a reckless gossip, is the subject of the portrait. He 'assumes a demure air' that he may seem the more assured of his intelligence; he is careful to quote 'such authorities that no one can possibly lay hold upon them;'; he makes 'plausible' comments upon his own story. It is the studied artifice implied in these touches which distinguishes him from the mere retailer, or even embellisher, of idle rumours, such as the 'scurra' in Plautus, who knows 'what Juno said to Jupiter'

(Trinum. I. 2. 171). At Athens more than in other cities the desire of news was a passion; other cities had their news-mongers; at Athens an exceptional demand produced the News-maker.

2 Asteius the fluteplayer] Asteius is supposed to be with the army. If it were only for festal purposes, musicians would always be found in a Greek camp. Fluteplayers, in particular, may have been there for two special purposes—as part of the military band, since Dorians, at least, like Asiatics (Her. I. 17) usually marched to battle to the sound of the flute (Plut. Lyc. 21)—and also with a view to sacrifices, at which the flute was sometimes played (Ar. Peace 952).

3 Lycón the contractor] The term ἐργολάβος included all who undertook work by contract; e.g. it might be applied to the sculptor who took an order for statues. Cassander was now besieging Pydna. He had sent for 'weapons and engines of all kinds' (Diod. XIX. 36); he had blockaded the city, and 'carried a palisade from sea to sea' (ib. 49). The 'contractor' may have been concerned with the works of the siege.

4 Polysperchon and the king] The time referred to is probably early in the year 316 B.C., OL CXVI. 1. The allusions will be explained by the following table of events:—

323 B.C. Death of Alexander the Great. Philip Arrhidaeus, the imbecile half-brother of Alexander, is declared king; a share in the sovereignty being reserved for the unborn child of Alexander by Roxana. A regent is appointed to govern for Philip Arrhidaeus. The child of Roxana (Alexander IV.) is born in the same year.

318. Death of the regent Antipater. He bequeaths his office, with the guardianship of the joint kings, Philip Arrhidaeus and Alexander IV., to Polysperchon, one of their father's generals. Cassander, son of Antipater, disappointed of the regency, goes to war with Polysperchon. Athens presently declares for Cassander. At the same time Eurydice, wife of Philip Arrhidaeus, resolves to throw off the authority of the regent. Roxana flies with her young son Alexander IV. to Aeacides, king of Epeirus.

317. Polysperchon invades Macedonia with Aeacides, accompanied by Olympias, mother of Alexander the Great.

Eurydice is defeated. She and her husband Philip Arrhidaeus are put to death.

316. Cassander goes to Macedonia and besieges Pydna, into which Olympias has thrown herself with Roxana and Alexander IV. [It is in the interval while Cassander is absent on this expedition, and before tidings have been received from him, that the Newsmaker is supposed to invent his story.] Aeacides and Polysperchon are prevented from succouring Pydna by the defection of their troops (Diod. xix. 36). The town falls; Cassander puts Olympias to death, and imprisons Alexander, with his mother Roxana, in Amphipolis.

'The king' in the text is therefore the young Alexander IV. It cannot be Philip Arrhidaeus, as Casaubon, Ast, and others have supposed, because: 1. Philip Arrhidaeus was ranged, in this war, not with but against Polysperchon. 2. Philip Arrhidaeus had perished before the war between Cassander and Polysperchon had been transferred from Greece to Macedonia.—Alexander IV. was put to death in 311 by Cassander, who himself died in 296 B.C.—Cf. c. vi., where Antipater is spoken of as still alive.

5 the hash has been dreadful] τὸν ζῶμὸν, lit. 'the broth,'—the carnage. The introduction of this phrase seems happily characteristic. A spirited metaphor is convenient to the utterer of a fiction.

6 the Porch] See c. i. note 2.

7 what workshop] See c. xvii. note 7.

XXI. THE EVIL-SPEAKER.

1 Evil-speaking] This character differs from all the others drawn by Theophrastus in being seriously odious. Still, the κακολόγος described here is too eager and outspoken to be a detractor of the most vicious kind. 'The sting of ill-temper'—as the last sentence of the chapter phrases it—makes him petulant and bitter; but this very petulance has a comic side. He reminds us more of Mrs Candour than of Iago.—For the word ἀγωγή in the Definition see Crit. App. XXI. 1.

2 in the style of genealogists] whose study was a very popular one in Greece. Hesiod's Theogony and the Genealogies of Hecataeus (in which the myths and family legends were treated historically) may be taken as representative instances of the early Greek taste for tracing pedigree. In Plato's Cratylus there is a sarcasm on this taste,—so far, at least, as it concerned the immortals. After observing that Zeus was the son of Cronos, Cronos of Ouranos, Socrates regrets that he does not remember 'the pedigree given by Hesiod, and whom he states to have been the remoter ancestors of these persons.' (p. 396 C.) Compare Plut. de Curios. c. 2 (people neglect their own concerns, while) 'they trace the descent of others, showing that their neighbour's grandfather was a Syrian and his grandmother a Thracian.'

3 Sosias] a Thracian name, Xen. Vect. 4. 14. In the Wasps, and in Terence's Hecyra, it is the name of a slave: in the Andria, of a freedman. The man is said to have changed his original name, which bewrayed a barbarian origin, first for that of Sosistratus, suggestive of gallant ancestors, then for that of Sosidemus, which speaks still more eloquently of a descent from Athenian patriots. Compare Lucian's Timon c. 21, where the sudden inheritor of wealth is transformed 'from the sometime Pyrrhias or Dromo or Tibias, into Megacles or Megabyzus or Protarchus.' And so in the Dream, c. 14, Simon, on becoming rich, dilates into Simonides.

4 in the ranks] This need not mean more than that he had served among the mercenaries of Athens. Hired troops had long formed by far the larger proportion of her military force; thus 10,000 mercenaries (ξένοι) and only 4,000 citizens go to Olynthus (Dem. de F. Legat. § 266). In the allied Greek army which met Philip at Chaeronea there were altogether 17,000 mercenaries (de Cor. § 237). Thrace, the country of Sosias, furnished Athens with cavalry and peltasts in the Peloponnesian war (Thuc. II. 29). But the κακολόγος probably means to hint that Sosias had been a Thracian slave—enrolled among the city-guard of public slaves (τοξόται), who, in time of war, were sometimes called into the field: see Boeckh P. E. bk. II. c. 11.

5 Sosistratus] A name illustrious in Sicilian history. The best-known Sosistratus was tyrant of Syracuse for a short time before the accession of Agathocles in 317 B.C.

6 when he was enrolled in his deme] A man was an Athenian citizen either (1) as the son of parents both of whom were citizens,—ἐξ ἀσποῦ καὶ ἐξ ἀσπῆς γεγονώς: or (2) by adoption,—ποιήσει πολίτης, Dem. adv. Lept. p. 466 § 30. In the latter case he was, upon adoption, enrolled in an assigned deme. A person who, not being a citizen in either of these ways, had his name on the list of a deme, was liable to a ξενίας γραφή. A case of fraudulent registration is mentioned in Dem. adv. Leoch. p. 1091. To guard against frauds, every register was periodically revised, and doubtful claims were voted upon (διαψήφισις: argum. Dem. adv. Eubul.).

7 a noble damsel of Thrace] See Plat. Theaet. p. 175 D, where it is said that mental clumsiness 'does not excite the ridicule of Thracian maidservants or of any other uneducated person, for they do not perceive it.' Again ib. p. 174 A the Θράττα is the type of an uncouth barbarian. 'Thratra,' like Syra, occurs as a proper name, Dem. in Neaer. p. 1357.

8 in the language of Corinth] See Crit. App. XXI. 3.

9 they answer the door themselves] Describing the consternation produced at Athens by the news of Chaeronea, Lycurgus says—'Freeborn women might be seen at the doors of houses, scared, stricken with dismay,...a sight unworthy of themselves and of the city' (in Leocr. p. 153 § 40).

10 for the pleasures of the table] eis ὄψον. He provides his wife with necessary food, i.e. σίτες, bread; everything beyond this,—meat, fish, etc., ὄψον—she has to find out of her allowance. Aristophanes mentions among the established customs of Athenian wives that of 'marketing surreptitiously on their own account' (αὐταῖς παροψωνεῖν: Eccl. 666).

11 to wash with cold water] The warm bath—denounced in the Clouds (423 B.C.) as a novel luxury—was already in Xenophon's time regarded as an almost necessary comfort: see Mem. III. 13. 3. The penurious husband grudges the cost of this cheap luxury.

12 on Poseidon's day] Probably the great day of the Poseidonia,—a festival ranked by Athenaeus with the Eleusinia as a great gathering, πανήγυρις (XII p. 590). As the Anthesteria and the Lenaea were respectively held in the months of the same name, it is probable that the Poseidonia fell in Poseideon,—the month answering to the latter half of December and the first half of January. Offerings to Poseidon on the 8th day of that month are mentioned in the Corp. Inscriptt. I. 523. 'On Poseidon's day,' then, means merely 'in the depth of winter.'

13 the character of insanity and frenzy] Because a bitterness so extreme against others, and such reckless impiety as that of blaspheming the dead, imply a mind which the gods have afflicted. As moderation, σωφροσύνη, was the first of virtues to a Greek, so the sense which he gave to μανικός was large. It included every violent sin against the principle of human humility (τὸ κατ' ἀνθρώπον φρονεῖν),—e. g. excessive railing at one's neighbours. See Plato Symp. p. 173 D, where it appears that a bitterly censorious person had acquired the nickname of μανικός. Cambyses, in his daring impieties, exactly fulfilled the Greek conception of μανία: see Her. III. 29, 33.

XXII. THE GRUMBLER.

1 Grumbling] Discontent, in its general sense, includes the quality which Theophrastus describes here, and which may be rendered 'Grumbling.' Discontent is either active or passive; but usage has given a predominance to the active sense of the word. When a man is said to be 'discontented' it is usually implied that he feels a restless desire to improve his position. The Grumbler, on the other hand, represents only the passive form of discontent. Dissatisfied with all persons and things, he yet makes no effort to remove the causes of his dissatisfaction, which is in itself a source of gloomy pleasure. As the Discontented man (in the special sense) is generally one who is striving to rise, the Grumbler is often one whose fortunes have declined. Theophrastus has lightly marked this when he describes the friends of the Grumbler as raising a subscription for him. 'All men whose affairs go wrong,' says Hegio in the Adelphoe, 'are somehow prone to suspicions,—prone to take everything as a slight.' The Grumbler entertains that presumption that 'all men are unjust' which, in a more earnest form, constitutes the Distrustful character (c. XXIII.). But, unlike the Distrustful man, he does not entertain it so seriously as to take secret counsel with it; it is with him rather a trick of speech, bred by despondency; and, instead of prompting him to guard against wrongs, finds vent merely in protestations that he has been wronged.

2 sent him a present from his table] See c. III. note 2.

3 never found a treasure] See c. XXVI. note 9.

4 the good news, 'A son has been born to you.'] In Lucian's Charon (c. 17) Hermes, acting as guide to the ferryman of Hades in a holiday visit to earth, points out to him a man 'who is rejoicing because his wife has borne to him a male child, and is feasting his friends on the occasion.'

5 by a unanimous verdict] No slight triumph where there were 500 jurors, or perhaps twice or three times that number. If the defendant in an action gained more than four-fifths of the votes, the plaintiff was fined; the unanimity, on a large Athenian jury, of even four-fifths being considered to imply a case so triumphantly clear that the other side deserved to be punished for presumably vexatious proceedings.

6 the composer of his speech] Antipho (born in 480 B.C.) is said to have been the first professional λογογράφος,—i. e. writer, for money, of speeches which his employers delivered in court. Lysias, Isocrates and (in early life) Demosthenes were among the great orators who exercised this profession—despised, like that of the sophists, chiefly because it was paid. Contrasting the career of Demosthenes with the undeniable respectability of his father, Aeschines says:—'The trierarch appeared changed into a speech-writer—so ludicrously did he belie his father's antecedents' (in Ctes. p. 78 § 173). Demosthenes retorts the accusation:—'Well, he applies to others the contemptuous names of speech-writer and sophist, and attempts to deride them; yet he himself will be proved liable to these charges...Now are not you a speech-writer, and a vile one?' (de F. Legat. p. 418 § 246). In the Phaedrus we find that a like taunt was addressed to Lysias (p. 257 G).—Cf. c. XXX. note 4.

XXIII. THE DISTRUSTFUL MAN.

1 Distrustfulness] Speaking of the general characteristics of elderly men, Aristotle says:—'They are ill-disposed (κακοήθεις); for an ill-disposition consists in putting the worst construction upon everything. They are also prone to sinister suspicions (καχύνοντες), through their distrustfulness (ἀπιστίαν); and distrustful through experience.' In this passage of Aristotle Distrustfulness has its most general sense, denoting merely reluctance to take things on credit. Out of this, when carried too far, springs a fault, κακοήθεια,—a tendency to construe unfavourably all the actions and motives of others. Of κακοήθεια, again, καχυποψία is a special form; viz. excessive distrust of the actions and motives of others as they affect one's self. Now the ἀπιστία described by Theophrastus is not the general ἀπιστία of Aristote. It is not even coextensive with κακοήθεια. It is that form which καχυποψία takes in a mind rather weak and mean than malicious. Hence the Distrustful man of Theophrastus presents an outward resemblance to his Penurious man; insomuch that one of the traits of the latter has been transferred by many editors to the former (see Crit. App. XXIII. 3). Many of their actions are, indeed, formally identical; the difference lies in the motives and consequent moral significance.

2 having sent a slave to market] See c. XVII. note 6.

3 will carry his money himself] The Distrustful man can, as we see below, afford a slave to attend him in his walks; but he does not allow this slave, as was usual, to carry the purse. Compare c. VI., where the Boaster chides his attendant for having come out without gold. So probably in c. VII.: 'when he pays a mina, he will cause (the slave) to pay it with a new coin.'

4 if the cupboard has been sealed] This was done with wax called πίτροι, Ar. Lys. 1195. Doors, when sealed, were not usually locked, the object being merely that the master might know if they had been tampered with. Diogenes has a story of a person who used to seal up his storeroom and then throw the signet-ring in through a slit in the door. His servants, discovering this, used to break open the storeroom, seal it up again, and throw back the ring (iv. 8 § 59). The wives in the Thesmophoriazusae complain that forged signet-rings no longer secure their escape from their sealed apartments; their husbands now carry worm-wood seals (θριπιδεστα σφραγίδια),—mottled in imitation of worm-eaten wood, so that the task of making exact copies would be endless (v. 427).

5 in the presence of witnesses] Some understand 'the same persons who originally witnessed the loan.' But this seems a needless refinement. The Distrustful man brings witnesses simply in order that, if his creditor repudiates the debt, the fact of the repudiation may be established. His remedy is then easy; for he has of course preserved evidence of the loan.

6 to send his cloak to be cleaned] See c. XXV. note 11. / 3

7 security for the fuller] He prefers the workman, whether skilful or not, who can find a friend to go bail in a satisfactory amount for the due return of the cloak.

8 to ask the loan of cups] Pieces of gold or silver plate were often lent between neighbours for the table or for a sacrifice (compare c. XIV. note 9). Athenaeus tells a story of a pretentious host whose table was covered with plate borrowed among his friends, and who bragged of his readiness 'to break all these things and get new ones.' A guest observed, 'then you will destroy every man's own' (XIII. p. 585). See the Rhetorica ad Herennium IV. 50 (a pretender to wealth has brought some guests home to dinner): 'He had charged his slave Sannio to borrow plate, couch-coverings, servants; and the fellow, who was not without shrewdness, had mustered a very fair show. Our hero brings home his guests—observing that he has lent his 'largest' house to a friend for a wedding. The slave whispers that the plate is wanted back—(in fact the lender had felt extremely uneasy). 'Go to!' quoth he; 'I have lent him my house—given him my servants—and now he wants my plate! Well, though I have guests, he shall have a loan of it. We will enjoy ourselves off Samian earthenware.'

9 he will almost assay the cups in the fire] His unwillingness to lend them is so extreme that he seems as if he wished solemnly to prove the fineness of the metal and to register the weight, and then to take formal securities, before parting with his cups. See Crit. App. XXIII. 5.

10 his slave, when he attends him] Citizens of the richer class were usually attended by a slave when they went out: see cc. IV., VI., VII. On the other hand it is a mark of arrogance in Meidias that he is attended by 'three or four slaves' (Dem. in Meid. § 158).

11 to persons who have bought something of him] On the text, see Crit. App. XXIII. 7. The meaning appears to be as follows:—The buyer has no money with him; and says that he cannot immediately send it by a servant from his house, as he has business to transact before going home. He therefore requests the seller to make a memorandum of the amount. The distrustful seller's suspicions are aroused. 'Do not take the trouble of sending a servant with the money' he says; 'if you have business to do, I will accompany you to the places which you must visit, and then go home with you and receive the money myself.'

XXIV. THE PENURIOUS MAN.

1 Penuriousness] 'There seem to be several modes of Illiberality (ἀνελευθερίας). For whereas it consists in two things,—defect in giving and excess in taking,—it is not present in its entirety to all, but is sometimes divided; so that some men exceed in taking, and others fall short in giving' (Ar. Eth. N. IV. 1). The Love of Money is considered by Theophrastus in the twofold aspect indicated by Aristotle. The sketches of the Penurious and of the Mean man portray it chiefly as a defect in giving; that of the Avaricious man as an excess in taking.

(1) The Penurious man, or Reckoner-of-trifles, answers to that class of the illiberal whom Aristotle describes as 'stingy' (φειδωλοί) 'close-fisted' (γλισχροί) 'skin-flints' (κίμβικες). He is minutely and consistently economical. He enforces his own rights to the uttermost; the rights of others he barely satisfies, but does not invade. He may even act from a certain sense of fairness, and from fear of being compelled to do something shameful (Eth. N. IV. 1). His fault is not necessarily more than that of misjudging the degree of economy which it is his duty to practise.

(2) The Mean man (ἀνελεύθερος) of Theophrastus answers nearly to the Shabby man (μικροπρεπής) of Aristotle (Eth. N. IV. 2). The distinctive thing about him is the disproportion between his economies and his fortunes. He is a trierarch; and borrows the steersman's rugs. He gives a large wedding-feast; and grudges food to the servants. Yet, like the Penurious man, though he treats others shabbily, he does not defraud them.

(3) The Avaricious man (αἰσχροκερδής Ar. Eth. N. IV. 1) 'takes whence he ought not, and more than he ought.' He cheats everyone: he sells watered wine to his friends, and gives short measure to his slaves. As described by Theophrastus, he includes the other two characters. Thus, like the μικρολόγος, he sets too little bread on the table; and, like the ἀνελεύθερος, he shirks giving a wedding-present.

2 while the month is current] Interest on money was at Athens often reckoned by the month. Thus 10 per cent per annum was usually called 'five-obol interest'—i.e. the payment of five obols for the use of 600 (one mina) monthly. The last day of the month—for which the Penurious man refuses to wait—was pay-day. Strepsiades in the Clouds, deploring his son's extravagance, says: 'and I am in despair when I see the moon' drawing the month out of its teens ; the interest grows apace' (v. 16). Again (v. 1130) :—'and then that day which of all I most dread and abhor and detest—then comes the last of the month (ἔτη τε καὶ νέα). Everyone of my creditors vows that he will commence an action and beggar me.'

3 a smaller libation to Artemis] This probably refers to a banquet given during a festival of Artemis. See Plut. de Glor. Athen. 7 : 'The Athenians have consecrated to Artemis the 16th day of Munychion (April—May) on which, while they were conquering at Salamis, she shone on them full-orbed.' Plutarch also mentions (de Herod. malig. 26) that before the battle of Marathon the Athenians had vowed to Artemis of the Chase (Agrotera) as many kids as they should slay barbarians. The number of the slain proved countless ; they compounded therefore with the goddess by decreeing to sacrifice 500 kids yearly. The Marathon-day was Boedromion 6th (late in September). The allusion in the text may be either to the spring or to the autumn festival. The only divinities to whom it is known that libations were ordinarily made at dinner were (1) the Good Genius, ἀγαθὸς δαίμων : (2) the Zeus and Hera Teleioi of marriage : (3) the Heroes : (4) Zeus Soter.

4 and charges him with it] For λογίζεσθαι = imputat, see Ar. Plutus 381 : 'Oh well, I do believe (Heaven knows!) that you would spend three minas in a friendly way, and charge me with twelve' (τρεῖς μνᾶς ἀναλώσας λογίσασθαι δώδεκα). So Arist. Oecon. II. 34.

5 broken a jug] Dionysus, in the Frogs, thus describes the spirit of the age : 'Now every Athenian when he comes home screams to his servants, 'Where is that jug?' 'Who has eaten off the sardine's head?' 'The bowl that I bought last year is no more!'' (v. 980).

6 upon his rations] A quart (choenix) of meal a-day, with figs and olives, and a little wine and vinegar, seem to have formed the ordinary rations of a Greek slave. To replace, out of these, even a jug, must have required prudence. In the Phormio of Terence Davus complains of the iniquitous fashion which compels his fellow-servant Geta to make a present to the bride of his master's son. 'What he, poor fellow, has saved up with difficulty, ounce by ounce, out of his rations, defrauding his appetite, she will snatch at one swoop, little reckoning with what pains it has been hoarded' (I. i. 9).

7 to eat a fig from his garden] Compare Plato's Laws VIII. p. 844 E: 'If a stranger, having come into Attica, desire to eat the ripe fruit as he passes along the roads, let him pluck the garden-fruit (τῆς γυναικὸς ὄπωπας, see Ast) without payment and as a guest-gift,—one attendant being also privileged; but of the 'wild' fruit, as it is called, let the law restrain our visitors from partaking.'

8 inspect his boundaries] The boundary-line between farms was usually marked by large stones or slabs (ὄροι). The Roman termini were sometimes stones, sometimes wooden posts. Ovid exhorts the god of boundaries not to allow dishonest encroachments (Fasti II. 677):—

To wheedling neighbours lend not thou an ear,
Lest mortals above Jove thou seem to fear;
But, whether plough or harrow graze the line,
Cry 'There is your field—this, I think, is mine.'

9 to enforce the right of distraining] ὑπερημερίαν πρᾶξαι. When, in a civil action, the court ordered the payment of money or the delivery of property, a day was named on or before which the order should be obeyed. The defaulter became liable, as ὑπερήμερος, to an execution in his house (ἐνεχυράζεσθαι). The same was the case when a loan, or interest upon a loan, had become overdue (Ar. Clouds 34). But to exercise the right of distraining, except in the last resort, seems to have been thought harsh. See the speech of Demosthenes against Euergus. A trierarch had obtained an order of the Senate for the delivery of certain ship-furniture which a citizen, bound to furnish it, had withheld. The term fixed by the order has expired; the need is urgent. Yet the claimant 'allows some days to elapse,' and only when all remonstrances have failed threatens to distrain (p. 1149). For another instance see Demosth. in Meid. p. 540.

10 to exact compound interest] The rates of interest in Greece were high, ranging ordinarily from 10 to 30 or 40 per cent. To exact compound interest was thought extortionate. Ar. Clouds 1156: 'A plague on you obol-weighers, you and your 'principal' and your 'interest upon interest.' In Lucian's Auction of Careers (πρᾶσις βίων)—where various lots in life are described and praised by eminent representatives—the Stoic Chrysippus defends the combination of philosophy with usury:—'Yes, the wise man, indeed, is the only man whom it can become to lend...Aye, and he will not take simple interest merely, like the rest of the world, but fresh interest upon that' (c. 23).

11 when he feasts the men of his parish] Every Athenian citizen was a member (1) by descent, of one of the ten tribes formed by Cleisthenes, and (2) of one of the three phratritiae or clans into which each tribe was divided: (3) according to his place of residence, of one of the demes or parishes—not necessarily contiguous—which each tribe comprised. Fellow-tribesmen (φυλῆται), fellow-clansmen (φράτορες), and fellow-parishioners (δημόται) had common sacrifices and banquets. A festival of tribesmen is mentioned in Demosth. in Meid. § 156: a festival of clansmen below in c. XXVI. The dinner of fellow-parishioners mentioned here is probably one of those which followed a sacrifice, and which were given by certain members of the deme in rotation. The Mean man performs this duty shabbily.—Compare a fragment from the Χείρων of Cratinus (the younger) in Meineke p. 515: 'After many a year I have come home from the wars—found out with difficulty my kinsmen, clansmen, demesmen—and been enrolled upon their mess-list' (εἰς τὸ κολεῖον ἐνεγράφην—'their side-board:' the schol. explains it συμπόσιον).

12 when he markets] See c. XVII. note 6.

13 to lend salt] See c. XIV. note 8.

14 meal—garlands—cakes] Barley-meal, mixed with salt, was strewn before the sacrifice on the victim's head. Garlands were worn by the sacrificers, and sometimes placed on the victim. Cakes were burnt on the altar. At the sacrifice in the Peace (v. 1041) the thighs of the victim are first laid on the fire; the entrails and the cakes (θυλῆματα) are then placed upon them.

15 scarcely reaching to the thigh] Athenian fashion seems to have been fastidious in regard to the length of the cloak. The wearing of 'short cloaks' is mentioned in the Protagoras among those things which mark an affectation of Spartan austerity (p. 342 C); and in c. XIV. we have seen that it is a mark of rusticity. On the other hand the arrogant Aeschines is described 'walking through the Market-place with his cloak drooping to his ankles' (Dem. de F. Legat. § 314).

16 their hair cut close] In order that it may be a long time before it is necessary to have it cut again. The philosophers in the Clouds are described as 'clever, sensible men, not one of whom—so economical are they—was ever known to have his hair cut' (v. 834). Close-clipped hair was, at Athens, properly a mark of mourning. Thus Theramenes, when, after Arginusae, he wished to excite a feeling against the generals, hired men to appear at the Apaturia in black clothes 'with their hair cut close' (ἐν χροῖ κεκαρμένους) 'that they might seem to be relatives of the lost' (Xen. Hellen. i. 7. 8). At Sparta, however, it was the ordinary fashion; and so, for a time, the Penurious man's hair would be in keeping with his Spartan-like cloak.

17 in the middle of the day] when people went home to the noontide siesta—as Horace did, at the same hour, to his luncheon and his 'rest in the house' (domesticus otior Sat. i. 6. 128). The Penurious man seizes the opportunity of sparing his shoes by taking them off during this interval of seclusion. Compare the Lysistrata v. 418. A shoe pinches, and this order is given to the shoemaker:—'Come at noon, and ease it.'

18 the fuller] See c. XXV. note 12.

XXV. THE MEAN MAN.

1 Meanness] See c. XXIV. note 1.

2 having gained the prize in a tragic contest] Not as the poet, but as the choregus who brought out the tragedy, and for whom its success was considered a distinction hardly less than for the author.

3 will dedicate a wooden scroll] The duties of the choregia consisted in finding maintenance and instruction for the chorus (in tragedy, usually of 15 persons) as long as they were in training; and in providing the dresses and equipments for the performance. Lysias speaks of two such choregiae costing together about £200 (de bon. Aristoph. § 42), and of another which cost about £120 (ἀπολ. δωροδ. § 161). The Mean man, like Aristotle's μικροπρεπής, 'after a great expenditure mars the honour of it for a trifle' (Eth. N. iv. 2). Instead of offering in the temple of Dionysus, or displaying in some public place, the bronze tripod which was awarded to a successful choregus, he dedicates merely a narrow tablet of wood, carved to resemble a scroll, and thus records his victory in the cheapest possible way.—Isaeus numbers among the private adorners of Athens 'those who had offered in the temple of Dionysus the tripods which they had gained as victorious choregi' (de Dicaeog. hered. p. 113): and Plutarch says that Nicias had presented to the temple a shrine (νεώς) on which these tripods were placed (Vit. Nic. 3). Before the time of Theophrastus a more costly fashion had come in—that of placing the prize-tripod in a small shrine built specially for it, either in the precincts of the Theatre or in the 'Street of Tripods' (Paus. I. 20) on the east side of the Acropolis. One such monument remains,—that of Lysicrates, choregus in 335 B.C. The site of the chapel dedicated in 320 B.C. by the choregus Thrasyllus (Paus. I. 21) is still marked by a cave above the theatre on the south side of the acropolis. Contrasted with this new practice, the Mean man's conduct would seem still meaner than it would have done at an earlier time.

4 subscriptions to the treasury] ἐπιδόσεων,—'benevolences' contributed by the citizens in emergencies of the State; usually to defray the expense of military operations which had suddenly become necessary. In such cases the presidents (πρωτάεις) of the Ecclesia made the appeal at a sitting of the house. Citizens who intended to subscribe then came forward severally and gave in their names. Meidias is accused by Demosthenes of having been backward on an occasion of this kind, and of having at last subscribed only in hope of escaping personal military service (in Meid. § 162). The double meaning of ἐπιδίδωμι—to 'contribute' in this way, and to 'make progress'—furnishes the point of a story in Athenaeus about Phocion's dissolute son. 'Once, when subscriptions to the treasury were being made, he, too, came forward in the Ecclesia, and said 'I also advance—' 'in profligacy!' roared the House with one accord' (IV. p. 168).

5 celebrating his daughter's marriage] Aristotle numbers among the fit occasions for magnificence 'those domestic events which occur only once—as a marriage, or the like' (Eth. N. IV. 2). The two chief ceremonies of a Greek wedding are alluded to in the text: (1) The sacrifice called προτέλεια γάμων, celebrated by the father of the bride and the male relatives and friends. In Ach. Tatius II. 12 this sacrifice is held on the morning of the wedding. (2) The wedding-feast, given usually at the bridegroom's house, but by the father of the bride, after she had been conducted thither. See Eur. Iph. in Aul. 718: 'Clytaem. Have you yet offered the nuptial sacrifice to the goddess (Hera Teleia) for your daughter? Agam. I purpose it... Clyt. And will you then give the wedding-feast which should follow?' According to Demosth. in Onet. I. p. 869 one reason for giving a large wedding-banquet was the importance of securing witnesses to the fact of the marriage.

6 he will sell the flesh] instead of entertaining his friends with it: see c. xv. note 2. Compare Alexis in Athen. xv. p. 671: 'The very Triballians have no such customs, where they say that the sacrificer allows his guests to feast their eyes on the repast, and next day sells to the starving wretches what he set out for them only to look at.'

7 the parts due to the priest] Ameipsias in Athen. ix. p. 368 E: 'The parts usually given to the priest are the ham, the rib, the left side of the face' (δίδεται μάλιστα ἱερώσυνα | κωλή, τὸ πλευρὸν, ἡμικραυρὶ ἀριστερά).

8 on condition that they find their own board] οἰκοσίτους. When servants were hired to assist the slaves of the household on a special occasion, it was probably usual to give them, besides their wages, their meals. But the Mean man engages the assistants on the express understanding that they are to find their own food. In the comedy of the 'Breakfast-party' Crates makes an economical person boast of having extended this regulation to his guests, and 'celebrated the wedding on a basis of self-refreshment' (οἰκοσίτους τοὺς γάμους πεποιημένοι: Athen. xv. p. 671). In the Casina of Plautus a man places his servants at the disposal of a friend; who replies, 'be sure that they all bring their own food' (III. 1. 7).

9 when he is trierarch] The duty of the trierarchy was not at this time burdensome. It consisted in maintaining the efficiency, for one year, of a trireme found, rigged and manned by the State (Dem. in Meid. § 156). The average cost of this was about £240 (ib.). A law passed probably in 340 B.C. had distributed the burden of the trierarchy according to an assessment of property, at the rate of one trireme for every ten talents (about £2400) of taxable capital. The taxable capital was  $\frac{1}{4}$ th of the aggregate capital. No man, therefore, was liable to maintain a trireme at his sole charge unless he possessed at least £12,000. If he had less, he paid his proportionate share to a Company (συντέλεια) who maintained a trireme among them. This system had superseded that of working the trierarchy by permanent boards (συμμορίαί), which had been found in practice unfair to the poor ; just as the still older plan of the simple or dual trierarchy had been oppressive to the moderately rich. (See Boeckh Publ. Econ. bk. IV. c. 11.) Comp. c. XXIX. note 16.

10 on the deck] Vessels of the larger size were usually, at this time, completely decked. Thucydides says that the ships which fought at Salamis 'had not as yet decks throughout' (I. 14). In a trireme there would be little cabin room below, and officers as well as men would live almost entirely on deck. But some vessels had cabins, for we hear of an open boat (ἀστέγαστον) being exchanged for a decked one (ἑστεγασμένον) on account of the wet weather (Antipho de c. Herod. § 26). Casaubon quotes a notice from Pollux of the deck-cabin which the trierarch usually fitted up for himself, and supposes that the Mean man has avoided this expense, providing himself merely with rugs. Compare Alciphr. I. 12: 'He lay down on some foreign carpets and wrappers, pretending that he could not lie like other people on the deck ; these planks, he said, are harder than stones.'

11 a festival of the Muses] Aeschines says that some of the old laws contained regulations 'for the festivals of the Muses at schools and of Hermes in the palaestras' (in Timarch. § 10). The celebration of the Hermaea in a palaestra was the occasion on which Socrates was introduced to the young Lysis (Lys. p. 606 D). On that occasion the young men and boys had held a sacrifice (ib. E). At the 'Musea' in schools there would be a similar sacrifice, and for this the pupils would be expected to contribute.

12 when he has bought provisions] See c. XVII. note 6.

13 sent his cloak to be scoured] ἐκπλύναι—properly said of washing linen, but here applied to the scouring of the woollen cloak by the fuller (γναφεύς). The process consisting in scouring—rubbing in a sort of white earth ('Cimolian clay') like the Roman creta—and carding to raise the nap. The Mean man, through not having a second cloak, probably condemns himself to an imprisonment of some length ; for the fullers were not famous for punctuality. 'If they would only give people their cloaks when they want them, just after the summer solstice,' says a speaker in Aristophanes, 'we should never have pleurisy' (Ecc. 415). In Athen. XIII. p. 582 a person is described imploring a faithless fuller to restore his cloak.

14 a subscription] See c. v. note 4.

15 the Woman's Market] See c. I. note 8.

16 the girl who is to attend her] It seems to have been thought at this time a mark of severe simplicity that a citizen's wife of the richer class should appear in public with only one attendant. Plutarch tells a story of a tragic actor, who was playing a queen's part, refusing to go on the stage unless the choregus gave him several well-dressed handmaids. The house was kept waiting, until the choregus, who was at the side-scenes, pushed him on, exclaiming, loud enough for the audience to hear,—‘Don't you see Phocion's wife always going out with one maid? Why must you demoralise the drawing-rooms (διαφθείρεις τὴν γυναικονίτιν) with your swagger?’ (Plut. Phoc. 19).

17 when she goes out] ‘Hard it is,’ says Calonicé in the Lysistrata, ‘for women to go out’ (v. 16). Solon ‘regulated the appearance of women in public, their mourning, and their festivals by a law prohibitive of everything disorderly or immodest (Plut. Sol. 21); and special officers to enforce these rules were appointed at Athens, as in other Greek cities. How early the Athenian γυναικονόμοι were instituted is uncertain: Boeckh thinks, in the time of Demetrius Phalereus, i.e. about 318 B.C. The institution, as Aristotle remarks, is essentially aristocratic: ‘for how are you to prevent poor men's wives from going out?’ (Polit. IV. 15).

18 as strong as horn] He wears mended shoes and declares—in a vigorous metaphor—that they are as good as new.

19 when he gets up] On rising in the morning he addresses himself to tasks which a needlessly meagre establishment imposes upon him.

20 twist aside] Had not much been written on παρὰσπέρψαι, it would have seemed impertinent to remark that he ‘twists aside’ the already well-worn cloak simply in order to save it from further attrition.

21 the coarse cloak which he wears himself] ‘Himself’ is added to emphasise the fact that his meanness is not shown merely in the administration of an office or a household, but affects the details of his personal habits. The τρίβων was a short mantle of coarse stuff. See Demosth. in Conon. § 34: ‘men who are of a gloomy countenance and affect the Spartan, and wear coarse cloaks (τρίβωνας) and single-soled sandals.’ The Achærian rustics wear the 'tribon' (Ach. 184), and it seems to have been the ordinary dress of poor men. Bdelucleon in the Wasps (v. 1131) associates it with the democratic dicast. Socrates sometimes alludes to his 'poor cloak' (τρίβων οὔροσι, Protag. p. 335 D). Being the ordinary dress of philosophers it afterwards came to be regarded, like the cowl, as a badge of austere life.

XXVI. THE AVARICIOUS MAN.

1 Avarice] See c. XXIV. note 1.

2 when he makes a distribution] μερίδας διανέμων. The statement is general: no particular allusion need be sought. The word μερίς, however, seems to have meant especially the portion of food assigned to an individual at a public distribution or at a picnic: see Plut. Symp. II. 10 'most of the banquets in old times were distributions (δαῖρες), a portion (μερίδος) being assigned to each man at the sacrifices:' and in Athen. VIII. p. 365 E, the money-contribution (συμβολή) made to a picnic by the guest is opposed to the portion, μερίς, allotted to him out of the common store.

3 will sell it watered] Compare Lucian's Hermotimus, c. 59: I do not exactly see how you make out the resemblance between philosophy and wine—unless, indeed, it is in this particular, that philosophers sell their wares as tavern-keepers do, —a little watered, as a rule, and adulterated, and of short measure.'

4 the lessees of the theatre] The theatre of Dionysus was rented from the Government by a lessee, or company of lessees, who undertook to keep it in repair, and received the entrance-money. As lessees they were called θεατροῦναι: as receivers of the entrance-money, θεατροπῶλαι. The manager of the theatre, perhaps appointed by the lessees, was called 'the architect' (ἀρχιτέκτων)—i.e. the superintendent of repairs, etc., in connexion with the theatre. Demosthenes speaks of asking the 'architect' to keep places for distinguished visitors (de Cor. § 24). The free-days referred to here were probably at some of the minor festivals.

5 the money allowed to him by the State] A small allowance for travelling expenses was made by the state to its ambassadors. The Athenian envoys to Persia in the Achærians receive each two drachmas—about 1s. 8d.—a day: and this was the pay of a θεωρός, or member of a sacred mission, at the same period: Wasps 1189. The members of the second embassy to Philip in 347 B.C. were absent three months, and received 1000 drachmas among them (Dem. de F. Legat. § 158). If, as seems probable, they were ten in number, this would not be much more than one drachma apiece daily.

6 load his servant] who attends him on the embassy. Slaves groaning under heavy packs were among the stock personages of comedy: thus in the opening of the Frogs Dionysus is moved by the complaints of Xanthias, who is toiling after him with the baggage, to give up the ass to him (1—29). In Xen. Memorabilia III. 13. 16 a person who complains of fatigue after a journey on foot is asked what the slave who trudged behind had to carry. 'My bed-furniture (σπρώματα) and the rest of my baggage' is the answer. Demosthenes is described as attended on one of his embassies to Macedonia by 'two men carrying packs' (σπρωματόδεσμα: Aeschin. de F. Legat. § 99).

7 the presents] ξείνων—meaning especially the provisions furnished to ambassadors by the Government of the city in which they were staying. For this sense of the word see Herod. VI. 35, where a man sitting at his door calls out to foreigners whom he sees passing, and offers them 'lodging and entertainment' (καταγωγὴν καὶ ξείνια). Plutarch uses ξείνια to translate the Roman lautia,—the present of provisions made in old times to foreign ambassadors by the Quaestors (Plut. Quaestiones Rom. 47).

8 anointing himself at the bath] Compare c. XIV. note 12, and c. XII. note 2.

9 to cry 'Shares in the luck!'] lit. 'to say that the Hermes is for both of us,' κοινὸν εἶναι τὸν Ἑρμῆν. Hermes was the gain-giver, whether he gave it by commerce, in his quality of ἐμπολαῖος (Ar. Plutus 1155); or smiled, as δόλιος, on some fraud which won it; or, as ἡγεμόνιος, guided men to where it glittered in their path or struck their spade. Compare Lucian, the Boat c. 12: 'Adeimantus (who says that he has been dreaming golden dreams), You have come upon me at the very height of my opulence and luxury. Lucinus. Shares in your luck! (κοινὸς Ἑρμῆς)—that phrase which comes so readily. Out with your treasures for all to see!' When a Roman dug up a pot of coins in his garden, it was Hercules, not Mercury whom he thanked (Pers. 2. 10, Hor. S. 2. 6. 13). But there was a Latin phrase answering to κοινὸς Ἑρμῆς: Sen. Épp. 119. 1. 'When I have made a lucky find, I do not wait for you to cry 'Shares!' ('in commune!'), but myself say it for you.'

10 sent his cloak to be scoured] See c. XXV. note 12.

11 the measure of the frugal king] Φειδωνία μέτρον—alluding to Pheidon, king of Argos about 750 B.C., by whom was introduced the standard of weights sometimes known as the 'Pheidonian' (Strabo VIII. 3. 33), more usually as the 'Aeginetan,' which were generally used in Greece before the time of Solon. The joke on the name 'Pheidon' seems to have been popular. The miserly stage-father was sometimes so called: see Athen. VI. p. 223 (quoting from a poet of the Middle Comedy): 'When some Pheidon or Chremes is hissed off the stage.' Alciphron. II. 34: 'Most of the newly-rich at Athens are shabbier than Pheidon or Griphon' ('Niggard')—probably another personage of Comedy). Strepsiades in the Clouds wished to call his son Pheidonides (v. 65).—The historical meaning of 'Pheidonian measures' has been explained by Boeckh. His results are briefly these:—1. From early times there existed in Asia two money-standards—the 'Babylonian,' used chiefly for silver; and another used for gold. 2. Between 780 and 730 B.C. Pheidon of Argos introduced into Greece a standard identical with the Babylonian, which was generally adopted by the Dorian states. The merchants of Aegina, in particular, spread the knowledge of it widely: hence the 'Pheidonian' standard was better known as the 'Aeginetan.' 3. The other, or gold, standard of Asia came through the Asiatic Greeks to Chalcis or Eretria, and was called the Euboic. 4. Before Solon, Athens used the Euboic standard, but after his time exchanged it for the 'Solonian.' The numerical ratio of the Aeginetan talent to the Euboic was 6 : 5; that of the Euboic to the Solonian, about 4 : 3.

12 he will buy a thing privately] See Crit. App. XXVI. 7.

13 to withhold four drachmas] i.e. about 3s. out of £120. Compare Earle's character of A Sordid Rich Man: 'Hee loues to pay short a shilling or two in a great sum, and is glad to gaine that, when he can no more.' (Microcosmographie p. 100 ed. Auber.)

14 throughout the month] It seems to be implied here that school-accounts were usually settled, as interest on loans was paid, at the end of the month.—Compare Demosth. in Aphob. I. p. 828: 'To such a pitch of avarice (αἰσχροκερδίας) did he go, that he actually robbed my teachers of their fees.'—The saving thus effected must have been small, unless the Athenian school-master were better paid than the Roman, to whom Juvenal says, after enumerating his toils (VII. 949)—

This do ; and take, upon the year's account,
What jockeys get for one successful mount.

15 because there are so many festivals] Especially (1) the Anthesteria on the 11th, 12th, and 13th, i.e. in about the first week of March. On the 12th, or 'Pitcher-day,' it was the Athenian custom that presents, as well as their regular fees, should be sent to the Sophists, who used themselves to invite their acquaintances to an entertainment' (Athen. X. p. 437). Hence Eubulides in the Comastae: 'You affect the Professor (σοφιστής), wretch, and long for the Pitcher-feast, with its pay and presents' (ib.). (2) The Lesser Mysteries of Demeter, held on the banks of the Ilissus: Plut. Demetr. 26. (3) The Diasia,—'the greatest festival of Gracious Zeus (Μετρίχιος), held without the walls, at which a great multitude offer public sacrifice, not of victims, but of the fragrant fruits of the soil' (Thuc. I. 896).—Not only would the scholars have all these holidays: they would also be expected to make presents to their master.

16 rent from a slave] Aeschines mentions among the items of a legacy 'some nine or ten slaves, skilled workmen in the shoe-making trade, each of whom paid their master a daily rent (ἀποφοράν) of two obols; the foreman (ἡγεμών) of the workshop paying three:' (in Timarch. § 97). Nicias possessed 'a thousand slaves employed in the silver mines, whom he hired out to Sosias a Thracian, on the condition of his paying one obol daily, clear of taxes, for each of them' (Xen. Vect. IV. 14). The Greek slave was regarded as capital; the Roman slave, mainly as a luxury. 'Romans,' says Athenaeus, 'have great multitudes of slaves, but do not make them sources of revenue... Most Romans employ the greater part of their slaves in personal attendance' (συμπροϊόντας: Athen. VI. p. 272).

17 the discount charged on the copper money] τοῦ χαλκοῦ τὴν ἐπικαταλλαγὴν. The Avaricious man is paid by his slave in copper obols. Silver obols being generally preferred, the copper coin had to be exchanged at a small discount. The master insists on the slave paying this difference.—Copper money seems to have first come into general use about the time of Alexander. Before that time the only copper coin was the χαλκόν, rather less than a farthing: even the obol ( $1\frac{1}{2}d.$ ) was of silver. The copper issue at Athens in 406 B.C. (Ar. Frogs 737) was exceptional: (see Boeckh P. E.).—Compare Athen. IV. § 6 (describing the extortions of an Athenian fishmonger):—‘Then when you pay him his money, he always exacts Aeginetan coin’ (the Aeginetan talent being to the Attic as 5 : 3),—‘and if he has to give you change, he moreover pays you in Attic (προσαπέδωκεν Ἀττικά); and so on both sides he clears the agio’ (τὴν καταλλαγὴν ἔχει).

18 the accounts of his manager] See Crit. App. XXVI. 10.

19 his clansmen] See c. XXIV. note 11. The banquet is in this case given at the Avaricious man’s house, but at the joint expense.

20 register the half-radishes] In the Frogs 987 the penurious citizen asks, ‘Where is the stick of garlic which was left yesterday?’ Juvenal’s miser is well known (XIV. 129):—

Who, in September, spreads a new repast
With mince, kept under padlocks, from the last;
Who hoards, to make the sultry morrow glad,
One bean, a shred of lobster, half a shad;
And counts, ere he imprisons for a week,
Each fine-split fibre of the stringy leek.

21 will let his own slave out for hire] When slaves were hired by one citizen from another, it was usually for the purposes of some business requiring a large number of hands. A mine-owner, for instance, would rather hire men than encumber himself by purchase with a large and permanent staff, which might lie on his hands if the works were suddenly suspended or contracted. See Xen. Vectig. IV. 16 ‘But why speak of old instances (like that of Nicias, above, note 16)? To this day there are numbers of men in the silver mines leased out (ἐκδομένοι) in this way.’

22 a club-dinner] We have seen how the Penurious man and the Avaricious man behave as semi-official hosts: the one in entertaining his parishioners, the other his clansmen. The same spirit is carried by the Avaricious man into strictly private entertainments. A few friends have arranged a joint dinner-party which is to be given at his house, and have sent in the necessities: this store he plunders. When the contributions to a club-dinner were in kind, as here, it was properly δαίπνον ἀπὸ σπυρίδος,—when in money, δείπνον ἀπὸ συμβολῶν (which Lucian calls συμφορῶν, Lexiph. 6) : Athen. vii. p. 292. Athenaeus there uses the phrase δείπνον συνάγειν, to get up such a party. Compare Ter. Eun. III. 4. 1. 'Yesterday a party of us met in the Peiraeus, to arrange a club-dinner for to-day (in hunc diem ut de symbolis essemus). We made Chaereas our steward ; rings were given (as pledges),—place and time appointed.'

23 a wedding-present] On the first day after the wedding—called ἐπαύλια or the House-warming, as being the bride's first day in her new home—'the relatives bring gifts to the bridegroom and the bride' (Hesychius). But the chief occasion for wedding-presents was the third day after marriage, when the bride for the first time appeared unveiled. The gifts then made were called ἀνακαλυπτήρια. See Diod. v. 2 : 'Some of the poets feign that at the marriage of Persephone and Pluto the island (Sicily) was given by Zeus to the bride as a wedding-present' (ἀνακάλυπτρα).

XXVII. THE COWARD.

1 Cowardice] When 'cowardice' is said to be 'a shrinking of the soul through fear' this is an explanation, but not a definition, of the term ; for, as Aristotle says, there are things fearful 'above human endurance,' which the courageous man will not only fear but shrink from (Eth. N. III. 6). The Coward either fears too much things which are really fearful, or takes things to be fearful which are not so (ib.).—Compare the so-called Platonic Definitions p. 416, 'Cowardice tends to check impulse (ἀντιληπτική ὁρμή), being the first cause of yielding.

The phase of cowardice described here is the fear of death or bodily hurt, and is seen in two cases—on a voyage and in war. Theophrastus perhaps shared the view of his master that ἀνδρεία is strictly 'physical' courage only, and ought not to be extended, as it is in Plato's Laches p. 191 D, to what we call 'moral' courage ; at least the view of δειλία given here answers to this limitation. On the subjects of the chapter generally, compare Arist. Eth. N. III. 6 : 'Properly, then, he would be called Courageous who is fearless about the noble death and about such things as bring it on and are sudden ; and such especially are the chances of war. Not but that the Courageous man is fearless also on a sick-bed, or on the sea ; but he will not be so much so as sailors. For landsmen at once give up all hope of safety, and are ill-content with such a death; while sailors are sanguine by reason of their experience. Moreover the cases in which men show courage are those in which there is scope for valour (ἐν οἷς ἐστὶν ἀλκή) and in which to die is glorious; but in death by drowning or disease neither condition is present.

2 protest that the promontories are privateers] The Persians, in their retreat after Salamis, actually mistook some sharp points (ἀκραι λεπταί) of the rocky Attic coast for ships (Her. VIII. 107). As ἡμιόλιος means 'containing one and a half,' ἡμιολία was a ship with one and half bank of oars,—the lower complete, the upper broken by a half-deck. ἡμιολία are sometimes mentioned in connexion with this period as used in enterprises where light, handy craft were needed; e.g. in the attempt of Aristonicus of Methymna to seize the harbour of Chios by night (B.C. 332, Arrian An. III. 2. 5), and in the nocturnal attempt of Agathocles to surprise Messene (Diod. XIX. 65).

3 who has not been initiated] Diod. IV. 43 (in the account of the voyage of the Argonauts):—'A great storm came on, and the chiefs were despairing of safety, when Orpheus, it is said, who alone of the ship's company was initiated in the rite' (of the Cabeiri), 'made his prayer to the Samothracian gods. Immediately the wind abated. And therefore storm-tossed voyagers ever make their prayer to the gods of Samothrace.' Ar. Peace 279: 'This is a crisis. Oh, if any of you happens to have been initiated at Samothrace, now is the time to pray.' The Coward refers here to the Eleusinian Mysteries. For the belief that irreligious companions are dangerous on a voyage, see Antipho de caede Herod. § 82: 'I think you know that many men erenow, having blood on their hands, or being otherwise impure, have, as companions of a voyage, drawn into their own destruction those whose relations with the gods were blameless... All with whom I have sailed have had excellent voyages.' Aesch. Theb. 598 and Hor. Od. III. 1. 16 are well known.

4 what he thinks of the face of the heavens] The Coward, verbally pious in his alarm, asks the steersman what he thinks—not of the face of the sky (τὰ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ)—but of the face 'of the god' (τὰ τοῦ θεοῦ). It is impossible to render the fineness of this touch; but it is necessary to represent it. The Greeks ordinarily said 'it [he] rains,' etc.; but when special reverence or emphasis was meant, 'the god rains,' etc. So c. XVIII., 'If Zeus would (be gracious enough to) send more rain, the crops would be better.' Ar. Wasps 261, 'It is absolutely necessary that the god should give us rain.' Xen. Hellen. IV. 7. 4, 'the god made an earthquake.' 'The god' of course means Zeus, who, etymologically, is the sky, djaûs: see Curt. Etym. Griech. § 269.

5 when he is campaigning] The main body of the army in which the Coward is serving has already engaged the enemy. Reserve troops have been left in camp, with whom the Coward has managed to remain. These, or a portion of them, are now going out to the support of the main body. The Coward calls to the men hurrying past, and pretends to be uncertain which of the dark masses in the distance is the enemy. By this means he gains a brief delay; and, when the others insist on advancing, returns on pretence of seeking his sword.

6 in his haste] in his burning eagerness to hurl himself into the thick of the fight.

7 his sword] σπάθη. The ξίφος was a short, straight sword, with a blade of not much more than two feet. Iphicrates (about 395 B.C.) 'made the swords nearly twice as long as they had been before.' Diod. xv. 44. This longer sword was called σπάθη; a word which sometimes translated the Roman gladius. Vegetius II. 15, 'longer swords (gladios) which they called spathae.'

8 sounded the signal for battle] τὸ πολεμικόν, the signal to charge (Xen. An. IV. 3. 29), is opposed to τὸ ἀνακλητικόν, the note of recall (Plut. Apophth. Lac. 68).—This is the third and most pressing emergency which the Coward has had to meet. When the main body went into action, he remained with the reserves. When the reserves went out, he returned to look for his sword. Now the trumpeter goes through the camp; to summon forth any laggards who may chance to have stayed behind. The Coward affects to be busied with the wounded man.

9 the men of his parish and of his tribe] See c. XXIV. note II.

XXVIII. THE SUPERSTITIOUS MAN.

1 Superstition] Ast regarded the use of δεισιδαιμονία in a bad sense as a reason for questioning the authenticity of this chapter. The bad sense, he contends, was of later date, and occurs for the first time in Polybius (vi. 56 § 7: circ. 160 B.C.). This criticism appears unsound. A word signifying 'fear of supernatural beings' may evidently have various shades of meaning according to the view of those beings entertained by the person who uses it. To say that δεισιδαιμονία never meant 'superstition' before the age of Polybius is in fact to say that doubts respecting the popular religion were never felt before his time. A term so general must always have had potentially a bad as well as a good sense. But the proof does not rest merely on a priori grounds. It is known that Menander—said to have been a pupil of Theophrastus (Diog. v. 36 § 7)—wrote a comedy called Δεισιδάϊμων, The Superstitious Man. And where Aristotle says that an absolute ruler will be more powerful 'if his subjects believe that he fears the gods' (ἐὰν δεισιδάϊμονα νομίζουσιν εἶναι), he adds—'but he must show himself such without fatuity' (ἀνευ ἀβελτερίας),—showing that the word δεισιδάϊμων did not, to Aristotle's mind, exclude fatuity, as εὐσεβής would have done: Polit. v. 11.

See Plutarch. de Superst. c. 1: 'Ignorance or uneducated opinion about the gods divides at its source into two channels. On the one part it soon engenders in refractory characters (ἀντιτύποις ἢ θεοῖς), as in a hard soil, Atheism. On the other part it engenders, as in a moist soil, Superstition.'

2 at a fountain] See Crit. App. XXVIII. 1.

3 from a temple-font] Vessels of water for sprinkling (περιπαρτήρια) stood at the doors of temples. Among the treasures of Delphi Herodotus mentions two such vessels or fonts, one of silver, the other of gold, dedicated by Croesus (i. 54). The ceremony of sprinkling was usually intended to purge a special defilement. Thus the messenger sent to Delphi for the sacred fire after the slaughter at Salamis 'purified his body and sprinkled himself' (Plut. Arist. 20); and the people of Miletus showed the fountain at which their fathers had sprinkled Achilles after he had slain the king of the Lelegae (Athen. ii. p. 43). What is for others an extraordinary purification the Superstitious man performs daily.

4 a bit of laurel-leaf] By carrying a laurel-leaf in his mouth, he places himself under the protection of Apollo the Averter. The same idea finds an ironical application in the proverb quoted by Erasmus (Adag. i. i. 79)—'I carry a laurel walking-stick'—i.e. a rod of virtue to chastise my enemies. In Lucian's Twice Accused c. 1, Zeus complains that Apollo is always flitting 'whither the priestess summons him, when she has drunk some holy water and chewed some laurel.' 'To have bitten the laurel' is Juvenal's phrase for poetical inspiration (vii. 19).

5 if a weasel run across the path] Xen. Apol. Socr. 13: 'Others believe that it is by birds, by sounds, by the objects that meet us (συμβόλους)...that the future is foretold.' Prometheus taught men to read 'the signs that met them on journeys' (ἐνοδίουσιν συμβόλους: Aesch. P. V. 495). It was a warning sign when the path was crossed by an unclean animal: Horace mentions some of these (Od. III. 27. 1—7). Compare Ar. Eccl. 792: 'If a weasel were to rush across the road, they would stop levying war.'

6 until some one else has traversed the path] It was the old belief that the evil portended by omens was not aimed at any particular person; and that, therefore, it could be turned off from oneself to another by precaution, or (so to say) by a vigorous protest. See the story in Dio Chrysost. Or. xxxiv.: 'A Phrygian was riding on a mule. Seeing a raven, and drawing a bad omen from it (οἰωνισάμενος), he threw a stone, and chanced to hit the bird. Delighted at this, and believing that the mischief had been turned off upon the raven, he remounted, and pursued his ride. The raven, however, after a little while got up again; the mule, startled, threw her rider; and he broke his leg.' Ar. Peace 1063: 'Priest. O mortals wretched and silly— Trygaeus. On your head the omen!'

7 three stones] These are thrown after the weasel; to symbolise, as in Dio's story, detestation of the evil power. Perhaps the same notion is to be traced in Columella's advice that three stones should be buried at the roots of orange-trees in order to prevent the fruit bursting on the branch (de arb. 23).

8 when he sees a serpent in his house] Ter. Phormio IV. 4. 24: 'How many things happened afterwards to warn me! A strange black dog came into the house. A snake dropped from the roof into the impluvium. A hen crew.' So it is one of the omens which proclaim the divine origin of Hercules that 'two crested snakes spring down the impluvium' (Plaut. Amph. v. 1. 58).

9 the red snake] The rapeías was 'of a reddish colour, with a large, bright eye, a broad mouth, not biting dangerously, but gentle' (Ael. Hist. An. VIII. 12). It was sacred to Asclepius (l.c.), and was also found in the temples of Dionysus (schol. Ar. Plut. 690). In Dem. de Cor. § 260 Aeschines is described 'leading those fine troops of bacchants through the streets,—squeezing the red snakes, and holding them on high above his head,—and crying euoe, saboe.'

10 Sabazius] Diod. IV. 4: 'Some feign that there was yet another Dionysus long prior in time to this one. They say that a Dionysus was born of Zeus and Persephone,—he who by some is called Sabazius, whose birth and sacrifices and rites they celebrate stealthily, by night and in secret. He, they say, was of surpassing sagacity, and first essayed to yoke oxen, and by their means to achieve the sowing of crops; whence it is that they introduce him crowned with horns.'

11 the sacred snake] described in Arist. Hist. An. VIII. 28 as 'a small kind of serpent, of which the larger kinds are afraid; its own length is a foot and a half. It is covered with hair. Wherever it bites, the flesh immediately mortifies all round.'

12 a shrine] The text is uncertain: see Crit. App. XXVIII. 4. The sense, however, is clear:—the spot on which the 'sacred' snake was seen is consecrated. Plato complains that like acts of superstition have choked up Athens with votive chapels and altars. It is the custom, he says, of timid persons in any sickness or danger 'to promise seats to the gods and divinities and children of the gods; or, when they wake in terror from dreams and visions—often, too, when they recall things seen in waking hours—to contrive altars and rites as remedies for these; and thus to fill every house, every quarter of the city, with their foundations (ἰδρυμένους):' Laws IX. p. 909 E.

13 the smooth stones at the cross-roads] Cairns, piled at points where three roads met, were regarded as rude altars of the triform goddess, Hecate Trioditis, Trivia; and on these, at the new moon, offerings were laid. The Superstitious man never passes such a cairn without pouring on it a few drops of oil from the flask which he is taking to the baths. Compare Lucian's Alexander c. 30: 'He was quite distempered in feeling towards the gods, and had the wildest beliefs about them. If he only saw an anointed or crowned stone anywhere, he straightway fell on his knees, worshipped it, and stood by it for some time, praying, and begging blessings from it.' Clemens Alexandrinus speaks of those 'who, as the common saying is, worship every stock and every smooth stone' (Strom. VII. p. 302).

14 if a mouse gnaws through a meal-bag] Plin. Hist. Nat. VIII. 57: (mice) 'are animals of no mean significance in public prodigies. They gave warning of the Social War by gnawing some shields at Lanuvium. They warned Carbo of destruction at Clusium by gnawing the thongs which he used for his boots' (alluding to the battle in which he was defeated by Sulla in 82 B.C.). Augustine tells a story of some one whose boots had been gnawed by rats asking Cato how the portent was to be expiated, and of Cato replying that it would have been more portentous if the rats had been gnawed by the boots (de doct. Chr. II.).

15 the expounder of sacred law] ἐξηγητήν. The Athenian family of the Eumolpidae—descendants of the first high-priests of Demeter—had in their keeping that body of unwritten tradition which made up the sacred law. Three members of this family (acc. to Suidas) formed a board or council to which all ceremonial questions were referred. They did not profess, like the inspired seers, μάντεις, to read the future; their province lay wholly in the interpretation of precedent. To them, in concert 'with the guardians of the civil law, the seers, and (so) with the god himself,' Plato would entrust, for instance, the expiation of crime (Laws VIII. p. 871 C). They were often consulted in cases where some special circumstances connected with a death made desirable some modification of the funeral ritual: see, e.g., Demosth. in Eurg. p. 1160.

16 to purify his house frequently] Houses, as well as persons, were purified after a polluting presence. Antipho de Chor. § 37 'On the day after the boy's burial, before we had purified the house.' In Eur. Her. Fur. 922 sacrifice is held 'to purge the house' (καθάρσι' οἴκων) from the stain of murder. Even the open air and the soil required purification from a moral taint: see Eur. Helen. 866.

17 Hecate has been brought into it by spells] Plato speaks of the wandering jugglers (ἀγύρται) and soothsayers who beset a rich man's doors, offering to injure his enemies 'at a slight outlay' (μετὰ μικρῶν δαπανῶν) by persuading the gods 'with certain alluring charms or binding spells' to help (ἐπαγωγὰς τισὶ καὶ καταδέσμοις, Rep. p. 364 C). In the Laws (XI. p. 933 D) he proposes to punish anyone who 'for the use of binding or drawing spells, or of incantations, or any such witchcraft whatsoever, shall be adjudged virtually a doer of violence' (ὁμοίως βλάπτοντι). Compare Plut. de Superst. c. 3, where the prophet tells a client who has come to him in alarm, 'Hecate has been paying you one of her riotous visits' (Ἐκάτης κῶμον ἐδέξω).

18 If an owl is startled by him] Antiphanes in Athen. XIV. p. 655:—

Men say that in the City of the Sun
Are phoenixes; Athene has her owls;
Doves are most honoured by the Cyprian Queen;
Hera of Samos loves her golden brood,
The bright birds conscious of admiring eyes.

19 Glory be to Athene!] 'Αθηνᾷ κρείττων. Having startled her favourite bird, he seeks to propitiate the goddess by a compliment addressed to herself. 'Athene is the better goddess after all!'—preferable to and stronger than rival divinities. For the comparative, see Ovid Met. XIV. 657, where Vertumnus greets Pomona with the words 'tanto potentior!'—not unlike the Irish salutation, 'More power to you!'—He cannot mean 'Athene is stronger (than the evil power which sent this omen);' for, to an Athenian, the appearance of Athene's bird was a good omen. Ar. Wasps 1085: 'However, we repulsed (the Persians) with the help of the gods towards evening; for an owl flitted through our host before the battle.' Aelian says, indeed (H. A. X. 37), 'When the owl attends a man hastening on some urgent errand, and then suddenly stops (ἐπιστάσα), it is not a good omen;' i.e. it is a friendly warning from the goddess to turn back.

20 tread upon a tombstone] μνήματι. Monuments to the dead were either upright slabs, στήλαι: columns, κίονες: shrines, ἱερόα: or flat tombstones, τράπεζαι (Plut. vit. dec. oratt. IV. 25: mensae, Cic. de Legg. VI. 26). The inscription on a monument often contained imprecations on those who should in any way dishonour it: 'If any one shall strip this shrine of its ornaments, or open it, or in any other way disturb it, with his own hand or by another's, he shall be suffered neither to walk the earth nor to sail the sea, but shall be rooted out with all his race.' Boeckh

Corp. Insc. 916. Compare Aul. Gell. x. 15. 24 (the flamen dialis) 'never sets foot on ground where a corpse has been burned' (locum in quo bustum est).

21 come near a dead body] Eur. Alc. 98, 'I see not before the doors the spring water for ablution, as is the usage at the doors of the dead.' The lustral water, χέρνυψ, was usually set there in an earthen vessel (δοσπρακον, Ar. Ecc. 1025), in order that friends passing out from their visit to the house of death might wash off the defilement.—The Superstitious man is not content with this remedy for the pollution. He refuses to incur it at all,—thus declining one of the duties of kinship and friendship—the visit to a corpse while it was laid out (c. XIII. note 3).

22 a woman defiled by childbirth] Eur. Iph. in Taur. 381 :—

I blame the niceties of Artemis :
Who, if a man has put his hand to blood,
Or touched a corpse, or her whom childbed stains,
Bans him her altars, counts him as defiled, Herself delighting in the blood of men.

23 the fourth and seventh days of each month] (1) The 4th of each month was sacred to Hermes. Ar. Plut. 1128, 'Hermes. Nothing of any sort does any one offer to us gods any longer. Karion. No, nor will. Hermes. Woe is me for the cake baked on the fourth of the month.' (2) The 7th of the month was sacred to Apollo : 'for on it Leto bare Apollo of the golden sword' (Hes. Opp. 768).

24 myrtle-wreaths and frankincense] Ar. Wasps 861 :
'Bring out fire, some one, with all speed, and myrtle-wreaths and frankincense, that we may first offer prayer to the gods.'

25 convolvuluses] Worn by bacchantes. Eur. Bacch. 105 :
'Thebes, nurse of Semele, crown thyself with ivy ; bloom with the fair blossoms of the delicate convolvulus, and make thyself a bacchanal with branches of oak or pine.'

26 the Hermaphrodites] Hermaphroditus, son of Hermes and Aphrodite, was probably one of the household deities (Petersen de cultu Graec. domestico p. 65). See Alciphro III. 37 :
'I had woven a harvest-wreath and was on my way to the temple of Hermaphroditus, to offer it to him of Alopeke' (meaning τῷ μακαρίῳ, her late husband).

27 if he has seen a vision] The belief in some dreams as foreshadowing good or evil was universal in the ancient world, and by no means confined to the superstitious. It is the anxiety to ascertain the precise import of any trivial dream which is here the mark of the Superstitious man.—Aesch. Pers. 202 :—

Such were the phantoms that appalled my sleep;
But, when I rose, in clear streams from the spring
I washed my hands and with sweet-smelling flame Came near the altar, fain to dedicate
Gifts meet for gods who turn mischance aside.

28 the interpreters of dreams, the seers, the augurs] He has recourse to one of three classes of diviners : (1) The special Interpreters of dreams. In spite of the general belief in dreams, the professors of a special dream lore were laughed at as early as the time of Aristophanes: see the Wasps 53, 'Shall I not hire him for two obols, with all his cleverness in telling dreams?' Alciphro III. 59: 'I mean to go to one of the people who sit with boards (πίνακες) before them by the temple of Iacchus, undertaking to tell dreams—pay my two drachmas—and relate the vision which appeared to me in my sleep.' A work in five books on the Interpretation of Dreams (ὄνειροκριτικά) by Artemidorus (circ. 150 A.D.) is still extant. (2) The Seers, μάντεις. In the large sense anyone was so called who spoke by the direct inspiration of the gods; and the various τρόποι μαντικῆς are enumerated in Aesch. P. V. 492—507. But μαντική meant especially divination by sacrifice, either from the appearance of the victim (τερομαντεία) or from that of the flame (πυρομαντεία). (3) The Augurs. Augural science never became so elaborate or so important in Greece as at Rome. The Greek instinct for 'spiritual freedom and clearness' rebelled against a system of minute technicalities: see Curt. Hist. Gr. bk. II. c. 4, trans. Ward.

29 priests of the Orphic Mysteries] The mythical personage Orpheus, regarded by the oldest legends as the servant of Apollo, was regarded by a later legend as the priest of an Infernal god, Dionysus Zagreus. As early as the 7th century B.C. were formed Orphic Brotherhoods, 'who, under the guidance of the ancient mystical poet Orpheus, dedicated themselves to the worship of Dionysus' (Müller Hist. Gr. Lit. p. 231). This cult bore a strong affinity to Indian asceticism : (a) in regarding the body as a prison from which the enlightened man seeks to achieve the deliverance of the soul. Plato Cratylus p. 400 C : 'I think, however, that this term ('body,' σῶμα) was the especial invention of the Orphic sect (οἱ ἀμφὶ Ὀρφεία)—signifying that the soul is in a state of punishment, for whatsoever cause ; and is girt about, for its safe keeping, with the image of a prison. This, then, is, as its very name imports, the soul's safe lodging (σώζεσθαι) until it has paid its debts.'—(b) In prescribing a life of ceremonial purity : e.g. as regards diet ; Plat. Laws VI. p. 782 C : 'Orphic lives, as they are called, were led by those of our race who lived then, adhering to the use of all inanimate things, but abstaining from everything wherein is life.' and as regards bodily purity,—the Orphics wearing linen only, like the Egyptian priests to whom Herodotus compares them, II. 81.

Such, in its original character, was the Orphic worship ; as such, no doubt, it long had pure and earnest votaries. But already in Plato's time the name of the 'Orphic Mysteries' was traded upon by begging priests. Rep. p. 364 D : 'Prophets and quacks (μάρτυς—ἀγύραι), besetting rich men's doors, exhibit books by Musaeus and Orpheus, those descendants of Selene and the Muses ; according to which they offer sacrifice, persuading not only individuals but states that (forsooth) deliverance and purification from deeds of wrong are obtained by sacrifices and childish mummeries (παιδιὰς ἡδοναί). These things they call their 'rites,' which deliver us from the ills beyond the grave : but, if we do not offer them, dread things await us.' Plut. Apophth. Lacon. p. 224 E : 'Philippus, the Orphic priest, was very poor, but said that those who were initiated in his rites were happy when life was over. 'Why, then, foolish man,' he was asked, 'do you not die at once, and have rest from bemoaning your poverty and wretchedness ?'

30 accompanied by his wife] It appears from this passage that women and children were admitted to the Orphic Mysteries. This was the case also at the Mysteries of the Cabeiri : Plut. Alex. 2 : 'It is said that Philip fell in love with Olympias on the occasion of his being initiated in her company at Samothrace, he being then a boy, and she a girl.' Women were admitted also to the Mysteries of the Eleusinian Demeter : Demosth. in Meid. § 158.

31 if she is too busy] Observe the irony. Greek wives were seldom busy.

32 sprinkled with sea-water] In Plut. de Superst. c. 3 the dream-teller advises the person who consults him to 'dip himself in the sea.' Circe, in the Argonautics, washes herself with sea-water after an alarming dream (Apoll. Rh. IV. 669). Purification on the seashore was the ceremony of the second day of the Great Eleusinia, when worshippers were summoned with the cry ἄλαδε, μύσται. In Theocr. XXIV. 44 salt is added to fresh water to increase its purifying efficacy.

33 the garlic at the crossroads] A 'supper' for Hecate was placed at each new moon on the piles of stones at the crossroads (see note 13). Ar. Plutus 595: 'Hecate can tell us whether it is better to be poor or hungry. She says that well-to-do or rich people send her a supper every month: whereas poor people snatch it away when it has hardly been put down.' Plutarch (de Superst. c. 10) quotes a mention of Hecate as 'fastening at the cross-roads on the guilty wretch who has gone after her foul supper' (καθαράτεσσιν ἐπισπομένη). The Superstitious man holds that he has been defiled by the mere sight of such wickedness.

34 carry a squill or a puppy round him] The object of all those ceremonies in which the offerings were carried round the person or place to be purified was to trace a charmed circle, within which the powers of evil should not come. Polyb. IV. 21: the Mantineans 'held a purification, and carried victims round the city and the whole territory.' In the Roman ambarvalia the victim was carried thrice round the cornfields. Plaut. Amph. II. 2. 154: 'Why do you not order a procession round her, as a madwoman' (pro cerrita circumferri).

35 a squill] Lucian Menippus c. 7: 'At midnight he took me to the Tigris, and purified me, rubbing me clean, and moving solemnly round me with torches and squills and divers other things.'

36 a puppy] Plut. Quaest. Rom. c. 68: 'The Greeks used, and to this day use, the dog for purifications. They carry forth puppies, with other expiatory offerings, to Hecate, and touch all round (περιμάτρουσι) with a puppy those who need restoration to purity, calling that sort of purification περισκυλαρισμός.'

37 spit into his bosom] A custom connected with the belief already referred to (n. 6) in this chapter—that threatened evil could be averted by acts or words expressive of violent repugnance to it. Plin. Hist. Nat. 28. 4. 7: 'We guard ourselves against epilepsy by spitting,—that is, we hurl back the plague (contagia regerimus). In like manner we repel the evil eye, and the lame man who jostles us on the right-hand side. We also ask pardon from the gods for any overbold hope by spitting into the bosom.' Lucian The Boat c. 15: 'Nay, Adeimantus, you wax insolent, and forget to spit into your bosom.' Polyphemus in Theocr. VI. 39 takes this precaution against a nemesis on his beauty. In such cases—where a nemesis was deprecated—the idea of self-abasement was perhaps present.

XXIX. THE OLIGARCH.

·1 The Oligarchical temper] ὀλιγαρχία, which properly denotes a form of government, stands here for ὀλιγαρχικότης—that habit of mind to which oligarchy is congenial. Compare, as analogous, the use of δυσσέβεια in Soph. Ant. 922 to denote, not the quality itself, but the character in men's eyes of the person who has that quality: τὴν δυσσέβειαν εὐσεβοῦς ἐκτησάμην: 'by being pious I have gained the name of impious.'

This Character and the following—that of the φιλοπόνηρος or Patron of Rascals—are essentially companion sketches. They are a pair of political caricatures, resting upon the fundamental antithesis of Athenian politics—government by the Few as contrasted with government by the Many. The partisan of either side is described from the point of view of the other; the oligarch, as loathing the mass of his fellow-citizens and ever tending towards a despotism; the democrat, as naturally attracted to whatever is low and tricky. There are two places in Greek literature where the bolder features of this contrast, and the commonplaces of recrimination which it suggested, are set forth with especial clearness,—the dialogue in the Wasps between the Admirer and the Loather of Cleon (471—724); and the whole speech of Isocrates On the Peace.

It is interesting to remember that at the period to which the Characters of Theophrastus belong the changes of party-fortune were unusually rapid, and party-feeling was perhaps more than usually keen. After his victory at Crannon in 322 B.C. Antipater abolished the democracy at Athens, and established an oligarchy.

His death in 318 was followed by the democratic reaction to which Phocion fell a victim. In 317 the oligarchy was re-constituted by Cassander. It lasted till the nominal restoration of the democracy by Demetrius Poliorcetes in 307 B.C., with which the contest of parties in the old sense may be said to have finally closed. Thenceforth the question was mainly as to the particular agent in whom the Macedonian government of Athens should be vested.

2 covetous, not of gain, but of power] See Crit. App. XXIX. 1.—The wealthy oligarch was usually accused of bribing in order to get power; the needy democrat, of seeking power in order to be bribed. Thus in the Wasps the oligarch is greeted as 'hater of the people, enamoured of monarchy' (v. 473). He retorts—'father, you choose these men to rule over us, and then they take fees from the cities at the rate of thirty talents a town' (v. 672).

3 whom they shall associate with the archon] The First Archon would of course take a prominent part in a great public procession; and, if he was also to arrange it, would require the assistance of special colleagues or fellow-stewards. Hipparchus was assassinated in the act of marshalling (διακοσμοῦντι) the Panathenaic procession: Thuc. I. 20. These assistants of the archon on a particular occasion must not be confused with his regular assessors, πάρεδροι. Each of the three principal archons might have two such assessors to aid him throughout his year of office; since, having been elected by lot, he might chance to be no man of business (πραγμάτων ἀπειρος, Dem. in Neaer. § 72). The six Thesmothetae had in like manner their 'advisers,' σύμβουλοι: Dem. in Theocr. § 37.

4 the procession] 'The procession' at Athens was that of the Greater Panathenaea. This festival was held in the August of every fourth year, the third of each Olympiad. The procession started from the chapel of the daughters of Leos (Λεωκόριον, Thuc. I. 20) in the outer Cerameicus; went by the Sacred Way to Eleusis; on returning to Athens, passed round the northern wall (Πελασγικὸν τεῖχος) of the acropolis; then along the west side of the Lenaeum and the east side of the Marketplace; and finally, ascending to the acropolis, offered to Athene Polias the saffron robe embroidered with her victories. The frieze of the Parthenon represented the procession of which that temple was the goal. There were two other great πομπαί, both annual,—at the Great Dionysia in March, and at the Great Mysteries in September.

5 ought to have plenary powers] αὐτοκράτορας εἶναι. At Athens this word meant especially 'empowered to act without reference to the Ecclesia.' Thus in the panic upon the mutilation of the Hermae in 415 B.C. the Senate of Five-Hundred was made αὐτοκράτωρ (Andoc. de Myst. § 15). In the revolution of 411 B.C. Peisander convoked the Ecclesia, and then proposed the appointment of ten Commissioners who should be independent of it (αὐτοκράτορας: Thuc. VIII. 67). The opposite to αὐτοκράτωρ is ὑπεύθυνος, responsible to the public assembly. An ambassador, of course, might in another sense have 'plenary power' (to negotiate) but would still be 'responsible.'

6 if others propose ten] The Oligarch's first demand is that the new stewards of the procession shall not be responsible to the Ecclesia. He now makes a further demand—that this irresponsible power shall not even be divided, but shall be vested in one man. This is a hint how he would act if he had the framing of a constitution. His oligarchy would soon pass into a monarchy: cf. note 2.

7 'No good comes of manifold rule'] From Iliad II. 204. Odysseus is urging the Greeks to hear their chiefs in council. To the powerful he is persuasive; 'but when, on the other hand, he saw a man of the people and found him making a noise, him he would strike with his staff and loudly upbraid: Friend, sit quiet, and listen to the speech of others who are thy betters... Assuredly we cannot all be kings here, we Greeks. No good comes of manifold rule; let there be one ruler, to whom the son of shrewd-minded Cronos hath given the sceptre and laws, that he may be king over his people.' The Oligarch's appeal from democracy to the poetry of divine right is the best touch in this sketch.

8 of the rest he is absolutely ignorant] A knowledge of the Homeric poems was one of the essentials of a good education. Isocr. Panegy. § 159: 'I fancy that Homer's poetry gained the greater renown because he nobly praised those who warred against barbarians; and that for this cause our ancestors did honour to his artistic skill both by musical contests and in the education of the young, that, by often hearing his verses, they might thoroughly learn the hereditary hatred of barbarians (τὴν ἔχθραν τὴν ὑπάρχουσαν πρὸς αὐτοὺς), and through admiration of the valour of those who went against Troy, might become emulous of deeds like theirs.' Xen. Symp. III. 5: 'My father, anxious that I should become a good man, made me learn all Homer's poetry; and now I could say off (ἀπὸ στόματος εἰπεῖν) the whole Iliad and Odyssey.'

9 we must give up courting office] Some officials—e.g. the Generals, and ambassadors—were appointed by election (αἵρετοί) in the Ecclesia. The Oligarch scorns to be at the mercy of the popular assembly.

10 about the middle of the day] He will not deign to mix with the crowd in the Marketplace during the working-hours of the morning. Towards noon, when tired men are going home to their siesta (c. XXIV. note 17), he will appear fresh and trim, and take gentle exercise in a street unprofaned by the hurry of business.

11 with his cloak gracefully adjusted] τὸ ἱμάτιον ἀναβεβλημένος. This perfect participle is sometimes used, without a qualifying adverb, in what may be called its pregnant sense—to express that the cloak is thoroughly or carefully adjusted. See Demosth. de Fals. Legat. § 281: 'He said that the sobriety of the popular speakers of that day is illustrated by the statue of Solon with his cloak drawn round him and his hand within the folds' (εἶσω τὴν χεῖρα ἔχοντα ἀναβεβλημένον). In c. VII., which has wrongly been compared, ἀναβαλόμενος has no such pregnant sense.—The cloak, ἱμάτιον, was a square piece of cloth: it was thrown over the left shoulder, brought under the right arm, and then thrown over the left shoulder again. This was ἐπὶ δεξιᾷ ἀναβάλλεσθαι, 'to put on the cloak from left to right.' Ar. Birds 1597 (to a Triballian): 'Why do you dress in this left-handed way?' (τί ἐν ἀριστερῇ οὕτως ἀμπέχει;) Plut. Theat. p. 175 E (a man may possess vulgar accomplishments, and yet not know how) 'to put on his cloak from left to right like a freeman' (ἐλευθέρως).

12 his hair daintily trimmed] The man of Petty Ambition is ridiculed for having his hair cut too frequently (c. VII.): the philosophers (Ar. Clouds 834), for never having it cut at all. The μέση κουρά, not mentioned elsewhere, is perhaps simply the mean approved by Athenian fastidiousness. A like attention to καίρος was exacted in regard to the length of the cloak : see c. XXIV. note 15.

13 the Odeum Street] See Crit. App. XXIX. 3. The older and larger Odeum was on the S.E. side of Athens : see c. XVIII. note 4. If a street near it is meant, the Oligarch is described as taking his walk at a distance from the haunts of 'the people'—the Agora, Pnyx, etc., in the N.W. part of the city.

14 the informers] Isocrates condemns the tendency to associate the informers—those pests of Athenian life—with the democratic side in politics : 'One of the ways in which we may mend the affairs of the city...is by ceasing to regard the informers as representative men of the people (δημοτικούς), and to identify the better class (τοὺς καλοὺς ἀγαθοὺς) with oligarchy' (de Pace § 133). Still, as money was the object of the professional informer, the rich must have suffered most from him ; and a rich Oligarch would naturally look upon him as one of the plagues of a democracy. The 'sycophant' was a character peculiar to Athens (Ar. Ach. 904). The best picture of him is drawn in the pseudo-Demosth. First Speech against Aristogeiton : —'He moves through the market-place like a viper or a scorpion with sting erect, darting this way or that, seeking whom he may afflict with misfortune or calumny or any evil, and so, by putting him in fear, extort money' (in Arist. i. § 52). When Aristotle was asked 'what he thought of Athens,' he is said to have replied—'A glorious place ; but there—ἄχνη ἐπ' ἄχνη γηράσκει, σῦκον δ' ἐπὶ σύκῳ :

Pear after pear grows old, and fig on fig :

i.e. the material for the sycophant never fails.

15 in the courts] The jury-courts were in their constitution, their tone and their practice thoroughly democratic. No institution was so hateful to the true Oligarch. Nothing, on the other hand, was more delightful to the ordinary dicast than the temporary abasement of rank and wealth at his bar. Philocleon in the Wasps undertakes to show that the dicast's position is 'inferior to no sovereign's' (v. 549). After describing the abject defendant, his flatteries, his prayers, his pleading wife and whining children, he triumphantly concludes—'Is not this a great empire ? Is not this a flouting of wealth ?' (v. 575).

16 public services and trierarchies] The representative of a property amounting to 3 talents (τριάκκοντος οἴκος, Isaeus de Pyrrh. h. § 80),—i.e. about £720—or upwards, was liable to the 'liturgies.' These may be classed as (1) the annual : Dem. adv. Lept. § 21 : 'those who perform the yearly, recurring (ἐγκυκλίους) liturgies,—viz. the choregi, the gymnasiarchs and the entertainers' (ἐστιάροες, who gave banquets to the several tribes). (2) The periodic at longer intervals : e.g. the sacred mission (θεωρία) to Delos, to Olympia and to the Pythian festival in every fourth year ; and to the Isthmian and Nemean games in every second. (3) The extraordinary : e.g. missions to the oracle at Delphi. The trierarchy in so far belongs to this third class that the number of vessels required by the state of course varied at different times. As organised in (prob.) 340 B.C. the trierarchy was perhaps specially unpopular with rich men, since under the old system of permanent boards (συμμορίαί) they had often paid less than their share : see c. XXV. note 9.

17 Theseus] Thuc. II. 15 : 'In the time of Cecrops, and in that of the early kings down to Theseus, the population of Attica was divided among several towns, each having its town-hall and its magistrates ; and, except in a season of alarm, they did not assemble to take counsel with the king....But when Theseus came to the throne....he dissolved the local town-councils and magistracies, and made the present city, with one council and one town-hall, the metropolis of the whole people... From that time to the present day the Athenians celebrate to the goddess the public festival of the Union' (συννομία). This festival was held early in the October (Boedr. 17) of each year. It has been remarked that in the Eumenides—which, according to one view, was a conservative protest against the reform of the Areopagus—Theseus, the hero of the commonwealth, is made prominent, as if to conciliate the popular party (vv. 356, 380). His centralising policy finds no favour with the Oligarch, who would prefer that of which oligarchical Sparta was so fond—the διοικισμός, or breaking up of a town into several villages (Polyb. IV. 27. 6).

18 he was the people's first victim himself] Plutarch tells the story thus. In the absence of Theseus and Peirithous on an attempt to carry off Corè, daughter of Aïdoneus king of the Molossians, a sedition was excited at Athens by one Menestheus, 'first of mankind, as they say, to attempt demagoguery.' Theseus on his return tried to restore his old power, but was 'borne down by demagogues and faction' (κατεδημαγωγείτο καὶ κατεστασά(ε)το). Having abdicated, and pronounced a curse upon the Athenians at Gargettoi ('where is now the Araterium'), he withdrew to Scyros. In that island he was killed by a fall from the cliffs. (Plut. Thes. 32—34.)

XXX. THE PATRON OF RASCALS.

1 The Patronising of Rascals] The last sketch described the Oligarch as shrinking from contact with the people,—marvelling why they should wish to meddle in affairs,—striving to keep all power in the hands of a coterie. In this chapter he is giving his revenge. At Athens the word πονηρός had what may be considered its political sense. It described a particular rank growth of character which sprang, amidst much that was good, out of the soil of Athenian democracy. In the representative democratic institutions—the Ecclesia and the law-courts—there was one great vice, arising from the very smoothness of the machinery and from the want of checks upon its swift, sweeping action. This was the insecurity of the individual. No man's character, property, even life was safe for a day from accusations which could be cheaply made, and which, when made in malice, were heard under the influence of rhetoric. Hence the terrible importance of the professional informer. Now the ideal πονηρός is to the συκοφάντης as genus to species. He is the man who avails himself without scruple of all those opportunities for extorting money, grasping power, or gratifying spite which a masterly knowledge of the available weapons can suggest. He is the skilled bully of the public assembly and of the lawcourts,—the finished knave which Strepsiades aspired to become under the lessons of the sophist, and which the Aristophanic Cleon already is. He is such a man as is described in the First Speech against Aristogeiton, where the meaning of πονηρία (§ 39) is thus drawn out (§ 41):—'He storms in the Ecclesia, falling furiously on all of you; and, for every advantage which he gains over you collectively in the assembly, for this, when he has left the platform, he prosecutes you individually—calumniating, begging, extorting.'

2 those who have lost lawsuits] Persons who made a practice of bringing vexatious lawsuits in the hope of occasionally getting a verdict would soon be competent masters in effrontery.

'Great is he, too, in lawsuits,' is said of the Reckless man (c. XVI.). Strepsiades, in his exhaustive list of the qualities which make up the perfect πονηρός, hopes that he may one day be 'an old hand at lawsuits' (περίτριμμα δίκων : Clouds 547).

3 and have been found guilty in criminal causes] The habit of getting up lawsuits (δίκαι) implies hardened impudence; the man who has been repeatedly convicted in public causes (γραφαί) is presumably a hardened criminal. The φιλοπόνηρος takes lessons in both the lighter and the graver branches of his subject.

4 to the bench] He undertakes to advocate the cause of the man who is on his trial, and addresses the judges in his favour. Both in public and in private causes the defendant was allowed to apportion as he pleased the fixed time given to him for speaking. He might, if he liked, surrender part of it to an advocate, though he was always expected to say at least a few words himself. The advocate was usually either a private friend or a person directly interested in the issue,—the taking of fees being forbidden under penalty of an indictment for bribery (Dem. adv. Steph. § 26). Thus Demosthenes spoke for Ctesiphon against Aeschines, and for Phanus against Aphobus.

5 the question is of the cause, etc.] He exhorts the jury to show that they are no respecters of persons,—not to be biassed against the defendant because he is poor,—to decide solely on the merits of the case. Appeals of this kind are, in fact, very common in the orators: see, for example, the speech against Meidias. A speaker who knew how to use this topic skilfully could, in an Athenian court, exercise a good deal of terrorism under the form of deprecation.

6 the watch-dog of the people] Compare the pseudo-Demosth. in Aristog. I. § 40: 'What, then, is the defendant? Some, I suppose, will say—'a watch-dog of the people.' Of what breed? Of such a breed that he will not bite those whom he takes for wolves, but will himself devour the sheep that he pretends to guard.' The metaphor 'watch-dog' was less homely to Greek ears than it is to ours. It finds place in one of the stateliest passages of Greek tragedy, Aesch. Agam. 591, where Clytaemnestra is speaking of herself as the faithful οἰκουρός during the absence of her lord:

and coming may he find,
Even as he left, the Watcher of the house,
To him leal-hearted, hostile to his foes.

It is somewhat curious that in the same language the dog should have been a proverb at once for shamelessness (κυνώπης, etc.) and for noble fidelity. The dog Argos in the Odyssey bears witness to a Greek feeling for his species very different from that usual in the East.

7 to form conspiracies in the law-courts] συνεδρεύσαι ἐν δικαστηρίοις. He has already been described as assisting his friends in the character of advocate (note 4). He now intrigues for them in the character of judge. When the panel of 500 or more jurors has been appointed to try a cause, the favourer of the worthless defendant forms a clique (συνεδρεύει) in his interest. He conspires with a few of his numerous colleagues to give the man every chance. Conspiracies of another kind are often mentioned in the orators,—where ‘a gang of confederates’ combined to bring on or defeat an action (τὸ ἐργαστήριον τῶν συνεστῶτων, Dem. adv. Pantaen. § 39: ἐργαστήρια μοχθηρῶν ἀνθρώπων συνεστηκότων, adv. Zenoth. § 10). But here the word συνεδρεύειν seems to show that the conspirator is on the bench.

8 and, when he is hearing a cause, etc.] The last sentence described him as arranging with his brother-jurors, before the trial comes on, that the person in whom he is interested shall receive favour. The present sentence describes his ordinary conduct when a case is actually in progress before him, whether his sympathies are particularly engaged or not.

9 in the worst sense] A certain shallow cynicism—as shown in his remarks on honesty—is characteristic of the φιλοπόνηρος. It reappears in this trait. Neither of the parties to this cause being so eminently knavish as to enjoy his exclusive favour, he comforts himself with the conclusion that both are knaves. The usage of the Athenian law-courts permitted strong and abundant personalities. The believer in general depravity takes these conventional asperities ἐπὶ τὸ χεῖρον,—i.e. in the fullest and worst sense which a literal acceptance can fix upon them.

10 Like moves towards like] Od. XVII. 218, ‘The god ever draws like to like.’ Arist. Eth. N. VIII. 1. 6, ‘There are no slight controversies about (friendship). Some make it a certain likeness, and friends, those who resemble us; whence the sayings 'like to like,' 'jackdaw to jackdaw,' and so forth. Some on the contrary say that all such persons are potters to each other' (Hes. Opp. 25, 'Potter spites potter, bard hath grudge to bard'). An examination of the proverb 'like to like'—ending in nothing more definite than the conclusion that pure contrariety is incompatible with friendship—will be found in Plato's Lysis, pp. 214 ff.

---

CRITICAL APPENDIX.

CRITICAL APPENDIX.

A list (1) of the mss. of the Characters, (2) of the principal Editions and Commentaries, is given by Foss (Teubner, 1858). In his Preface he has some remarks on the different classes and ages of the mss. and on some of the editions. The relation of the mss. to each other is fully discussed by Petersen in his Introduction.

From a comparison of these authorities, with occasional help from other sources, the following account has been drawn up. It is given here because it may be convenient to those who intend to make a critical study of the Characters to have in a compact form the principal facts about the mss. and some notice of the best editions.

The editions of Ast, Foss, Sheppard, Petersen and Ussing are the only ones which the writer of these notes on the text has had before him. The varietas scripturae appended to the edition of Foss, and the apparatus criticus given at the foot of each page by Petersen, supply the necessary materials for forming a judgment on disputed passages. Ast, Foss and Ussing give in their commentaries the best conjectures of previous editors.

I. MANUSCRIPTS.

The extant mss. of the Characters, 36 in all, exhibit three different recensions or editions, viz.

1. The Vulgate, or that recension which appears in 34 of the 36 mss. Of these 26 contain the first 15 Characters (as they stand in the traditional order, see p. 75), 4 the first 23, and 4 the first 28. The two oldest and best are usually called 'Paris A, B,' being nos. 3264 and 2751 in the Imperial Library at Paris. These contain the first 15 Characters only. A is probably of the 9th century, B of the 10th. Dübner thinks that both belong to the early part of the 10th.

2. A recension found in one ms., formerly in the Palatine Library, now no. CX. in the Vatican. This contains the last 15 Characters only, and is the only ms. which has the 29th and 30th. Also in cc. 15—28 it gives additions which are found in no other ms. It is sometimes called (as by Foss) 'Palatinus,' sometimes (as by Ussing) 'Vaticanus.' With Petersen I designate it as the Palatino-Vatican (PVat.). Foss thinks that it was written in the 13th century.

3. A recension found in one ms., now in the Library at Munich. This contains the first 21 Characters, and gives them in a shorter form than any other ms. It is usually called the Munich Epitome. At the beginning it has an index to all the thirty Characters. It belongs to the 14th or 15th century.

Characters 29 and 30 (nos. 30 and 26 in our Translation, see p. 75) were first published from the PVat. in 1786 at Parma by J. C. Amaduzzi. The additions made to cc. 15—28 by the PVat. were first published in 1788 by J. A. Goetz, in the Anecdota Graeca of Siebenkees, which he edited after his friend's death. For many years afterwards the students of the Characters were divided into two schools; those who denied, and those who allowed, the authenticity of the extra matter in the PVat.

The principal impugnors of the PVat. were Coray, in his edition published at Paris in 1799; Ast, in his edition, Leipzig, 1816; and Hottinger, in his German Translation, Munich, 1821. Ast does not even admit the PVat. additions into his text, but prints them in small type at the foot of the page; c. 29 [30] he regards as wholly spurious; c. 30 [26] as patched together from fragments of cc. 9 [15], 10 [24], 22 [25.] But he is not consistent; for in a passage of c. 22 [25] (καὶ τῇ γυναικὶ δέ... μὴ πλασθαί) and in another of c. 24 [4] (καὶ βαδίζων ἐν ταῖς ὁδοῖς τὰς διακῆρας κρῖνειν) he admits part of the PVat. supplement and rejects the rest. The earliest champions of that ms. were J. G. Schneider, — whose first edition appeared at Jena in 1799, the second at Leipzig in 1818, — and S. N. J. Bloch, in his edition published at Leipzig in 1814. But the turning point in the opinion of scholars on the question was the appearance of three dissertations published successively at Halle in 1834—6 by H. E. Foss. In these he defended very forcibly and elaborately the genuineness of the supplements in the PVat. and of its two extra chapters. Among his earliest converts were E. Meier and F. Dübner; the latter of whom published his edition at Paris in 1840. Since that time the PVat. has been generally acknowledged to be the best as well as the fullest authority for cc. 15—28, and the authenticity of cc. 29, 30 has been considered as established.

The latest statement of the case for the PVat. ms. is by Dr E. Petersen, in an essay which gained a University prize at Bonn in 1857, and which he published, slightly altered, in 1859. He agrees with Foss in the main, but differs from him in a few particulars. A full analysis of his essay would be out of place here; but an outline of his argument may be useful to those who wish to read it. (1) In respect to the supplements in the PVat. it is argued that there are (a) cases in which they can be proved to be genuine by their intimate and necessary coherence with the text of the Vulgate: pp. 4—17; (b) cases, in which, though they cannot be proved genuine, there are no sufficient grounds for condemning them: pp. 17—19. (2) The opinion that the Munich Epitome represents the true text, and that the other two recensions are paraphrases of it, is examined and refuted. It is shown that of all possible hypotheses as to the relations of the three recensions to each other the only probable one is that the PVat. came from the same archetype from which were derived, but less immediately, the Vulgate on the one hand and the Epitome on the other: pp. 19—24. (3) The several families of the mss. which have the Vulgate text are then examined: pp. 24—55. (4) Lastly the probable relation between the PVat. and the archetype of the Vulgate and Epitome is more exactly defined. From the same book which was the source of the PVat. was made another copy; in which the last leaf, containing on its inner page a part of c. 30, [26 in our Trans.] had by accident been shifted to a place next c. 11 [17.] The leaf originally last but one, and which contained c. 29 [30], was thus left last; and, being exposed to ill-usage, became illegible, and was left out by transcribers. From this copy was taken (with sundry omissions) the archetype of the Vulgate. Hence in the Vulgate cc. 29, 30 do not appear, but a part of c. 30 is found in c. 11 (see Crit. App. xvi.). And from this copy came also the Munich Epitome.—The archetype of the PVat.,—which would thus have been the common ancestor of all our mss.,—was probably not much older than the 10th century (pp. 55, 6: compare p. 23).

II. EDITIONS AND COMMENTARIES.

1527. Pirckeymher publishes at Nuremberg an edition of the first 15 Characters—apparently the first after the revival of letters.

1552. J. Baptista Camot, in an edition of Aristotle, publishes 23 of the Characters, along with other writings of Theophrastus.

1598. Isaac Casaubon edits 28 Characters; the 5 new ones from 4 mss. in the Palatine Library at Heidelberg. It was even then known that the number of the Characters was not complete: for indices to 30 had been found in some mss. But nearly two centuries more elapsed before the missing chapters were found.

1712. Peter Needham published at Cambridge an edition in which the novelty was the weight given to the two Paris mss. A, B, in the first 15 chapters; but he did not follow them consistently.

1737. J. C. de Pauw publishes an edition with some good conjectures, for which he is often quoted.

1739. J. C. Schwartz follows Needham chiefly, but alters and conjectures audaciously.

1767. J. F. Fischer bases his edition, like the other editors, on the majority of inferior mss., forsaking the two Paris mss. of which Needham had recognised the importance.

? J. J. Reiske's Animadversiones in Auctores Graecos (1. pp. 96—105) contain some good critical notes on the Characters.

1786. J. C. Amaduzzi publishes at Parma the two long-missing Characters, 29 and 30, from a ms. formerly in the Palatine, now no. CX. in the Vatican library. It had already been reported by Petronius that this same ms. contained cc. 15—28 in a fuller form : and in 1788. J. P. Siebenkees copies these out for insertion in his Anecdota Graeca, collected in Italian libraries. He dies before publishing the book, and it is edited by J. A. Goetz.

1789. Coray's edition appears at Paris. He maintains strongly that the supplements discovered in the Palatine ms. are spurious. His notes and (in some cases) his conjectures are good.

1799. J. G. Schneider, in his first edition published at Jena, adopts and defends the Palatine supplements. His edition is one of the most important, and is constantly referred to by later editors. It was re-issued at Leipzig in 1818—21.

1814. S. N. J. Bloch publishes an edition at Leipzig, in which he follows Schneider in maintaining the authenticity of the Palatine supplements.

1816. F. Ast publishes at Leipzig an edition in which he re-asserts the view of Coray that the extra matter in the PVat., including c. 29, is spurious : c. 30 he regards as a patchwork from other chapters.

1821. J. J. Hottinger publishes at Munich a German Translation, in which he takes nearly the same view.

Chr. Wurm publishes in the Munich Journal of Philology the first 21 Characters, in a shorter form than that of the Vulgate, as he had found them in a ms. at Munich (the Epitome). F. Thiersch maintains the view that this epitome gives the proem, and at least the first five chapters, in their genuine form, the Vulgate having been amplified by interpolation.

1830—1850. E. Meier brings out at intervals five critical essays on the Characters. While writing these, he adopted the view of Foss respecting the Palatine ms.

1834—6. H. E. Foss, in three dissertations published in three successive years at Halle, maintains (1) that the Munich text is not complete, but a mere epitome : (2) that all the Palatine supplements are genuine.

1840. F. Dübner, in his edition published at Paris, takes the same view.

1852. J. G. Sheppard publishes in London an edition in which he recurs to the theory that the PVat. additions are spurious. He adopts, but modifies, the text of Ast. This Commentary is interesting for its illustrations from modern literature.

1857. H. J. A. Hartung's edition appears at Leipzig. He adopts the Palatine supplements.

1858. H. E. Foss publishes in Teubner's series an edition of the text of the Characters, with the 'Varietas Scripturae' appended. In this he used a collation of the PVat. ms. made in 1843 by C. Badham.

1859. E. Petersen's essay on the mss. of the Characters and on the history of the book appears at Leipzig. He gives also the text of the Characters, with a collation of several mss. at the foot of each page; and also prints the Munich epitome of the first 21 chapters. It is altogether a most valuable book.

1868. J. L. Ussing publishes a volume containing the Characters of Theophrastus, the 10th book of Philodemus περὶ κακιῶν, and (in an appendix) two short extracts from Rutilius Lupus and from the Rhetorica ad Herennium. The chief value of the book consists in the excellent though somewhat scanty commentary. In dealing with the text he is usually cautious, but now and then makes emendations which show more ingenuity than instinct for the language.

---

ΘΕΟΦΡΑΣΤΟΥ ΧΑΡΑΚΤΗΡΕΣ.] The mss. call the book simply χαρακτήρες. Diogenes v. 47 cites it as ἡθικοί χαρακτήρες, and from him some modern editors have adopted the adjective.

1. προσίμουν.] Needham, Pauw and Coray give the heading as προσίμουν: Goetz, Schneider and others as Θεόφραστος Πολυκεῖ. Most mss., acc. to Ast, have no heading at all.

2. ποιήσομαι τὸν λόγον ἀπὸ τῶν τῆν εἰρ. ἐξηλωκότων.] The two Paris mss., and another of less authority, omit the words τὸν λόγον ἀπὸ. Hence Foss reads on his own conjecture ποιήσομαι μείλαν.

3. καθιστάναι.] Vulg. καταστήσαι. καθιστάναι, restored by Foss from Paris A and B, is adopted by Petersen and Ussing.

I.

1. καὶ ἐπαινέσαι δὲ ἀκούοντος.] Foss transposes this clause, placing it after ὁρῶντος αὐτοῦ below. But it is in keeping with the character of the Flatterer that, though he has desired the others to be silent, he himself praises the speaker in loud whispers. Ussing brackets the words as spurious.

2. εἰ παύεται.] Vulg. εἰ παύσεται. But εἰ with the fut. indic. is out of place here: it would mean 'if (as is the case) he is destined to stop.' Foss's ἐπὶ παύσεται, which Ussing adopts, is too far from the mss. Ast reads εἰ παύεται, and suggests ἦν παύσεται. The former seems best. When his patron—who perhaps is not a fluent speaker—pauses and is at loss for a word, the Flatterer encourages him. ἐπὶν παύσῃται, which supposes him to say ‘ὀρθῶς’ once for all at the end of the speech, is not only a rash conjecture, but appears to give a less pointed meaning.

3. καὶ συνωνούμενος δὲ κρηπίδας.] Vulg. καὶ συνωνούμενος ἐπὶ κρηπίδας, i.e. ‘going with him to the slipper-market to buy:’ but to supply the idea of motion from συνωνούμενος is very harsh. Petersen alters ἐπὶ to ἐν, and transposes it to a place between εἶναι and εὐρυμότερον—greatly to the enfeebling of the latter word. The correction (an old one) of ἐπὶ to δέ appears the best at present.

4. παρακείμενος.] So Ast and Foss with a good ms. The others mostly have παραμένω, evidently a corruption, perhaps from παρα(κεί)μενος. Ussing, with Gronovius, τῷ παρακειμένῳ.

5. ὡς μαλακῶς ἐσθλείς.] Ast, οὐ μαλακῶς ἐσθλείς, ‘you are uncomfortably placed at table.’ Casaubon conj. ὡς μαλακῶς ἐστιῶς. Foss ὡς μαλακῶς [ἐχων] ἐσθλείς. But the context shows that the Flatterer is praising the fare. His words imply that the host is accustomed to delicate living. With Casaubon’s ingenious ἐστιῶς an adverb such as λαμπρῶς would have been more appropriate than μαλακῶς.

6. καὶ ἐν ταῦτα λέγων περιστεῖλαι αὐτόν.] The words ταῦτα λέγων had got out of their place, a copyist having written them after καὶ μὴν. Reiske, followed by Ast, Foss, and Ussing, has restored them to their right place. Petersen leaves them in the wrong one, after καὶ μὴν, and alters περιστεῖλαι to περιστεῖλαι, understanding apparently: ‘he asks whether he shall wrap him up:’ in which sense εἰ περιστεῖλαι is not Greek.

7. πάντα—οἷς.] Vulg. πάντα—φ: corrected by Ast. There can be little doubt that φ was a slip of the pen. If it were to be kept, I should like to read πάν τι for πάντα. Ussing reads on his own conj. εἰ.

II.

1. ἀμφοτέραις ταῖς χερσὶ μὴ ἀφίεναι.] Schneider thought that λαβὼν or ἐπιλαβόμενος had dropped out after χερσὶ, and Foss inserts λαβόμενος in brackets. This seems unnecessary: μὴ-ἀφίεναι = ἐχων διατελεῖν.

2. ἐνταῖνέν.] So most mss. Foss and Petersen ἐνταῖνέν, with Par. A, B, and others. Orelli’s conjecture ἐνταῖνέν has been adopted by Dübner, Hartung, and Ussing: rashly, I think.

3. καθίστασθαι.] So Foss, Petersen, Ussing with Par. A, B, etc. Vulg. καθίστασθαι, and so Ast: which I should prefer, did not the word καθίστασθαι appear to be used with something of an ironical tone: ‘he manages to establish them beside him.’ The middle voice helps the irony.

III.

1. οὐκ ἂν γένοιτο δεδομένων.] Vulg. οὐκ ἂν γένοιτο δεδομένα: and so Foss and Ussing, —the latter thinking it corrupt. Meier attempted to render the vulgate:—‘They are not likely to prove presents:’ i. e. ‘I shall be expected to pay for them by a return-present:’ a very strained version, which would, besides, require δεδομένα. Reiske, whom Schneider follows, conjectured οὐκ ἂν γένοιτο δεδομένων: but I prefer Ast’s οὐκ ἂν γένοιτο δεδομένων, because διδόμενα, things offered, is more appropriate here than δεδομένα, things given. Petersen conj. οὐκ ἂν δέχοιτο διδόμενα (not, as Ussing reports him, δεδομένα).

2. οὐτε τῷ χρώσαντι αὐτόν...οὐτε τῷ ὥσαντι οὐτε τῷ ἐμβάντι.] Mss. οὐτε τῷ ἀπώσαντι αὐτόν...οὐτε τῷ ὥσαντι οὐτε τῷ ἐμβάντι. Schneider and Petersen correct ἀπώσαντι to ὥσαντι, and put the second ὥσαντι in brackets; believing that, when ἀπώσαντι had been written by mistake, ὥσαντι was written in the margin as a correction, and thence found an independent place in the text. Ussing adopts this view. To me it seems more probable that ἀπώσαντι is a corruption of something else than merely ὥσαντι. A list of several petty annoyances which the Surly man cannot pardon seems almost necessary to the spirit of the passage. Petersen’s ῥυπώσαντι is a little too strong, and though ῥυπᾶω (intr.) is common, the transitive ῥυπῶ is a very rare word. Ast’s χρώσαντι seems precisely what is wanted.

IV.

1. μνηστῆσαι φάσκεν· καὶ βαδίζων ἐν ταῖς ὁδοῖς τὰς διατάς κρίνειν τοῖς ἐπιτρέψασι.] Vulg. μνηστῆσαι φάσκεν ἐν ταῖς ὁδοῖς καὶ βαδίζων τὰς διατάς κρίνειν ἐν τοῖς ἐπιτρέψασι. The PVat. places the words καὶ βαδίζων before ἐν ταῖς ὁδοῖς. For βαδίζων Schweighäuser (and Sheppard independently) conj. βαδίζων: which, as the best available correction, I have taken, omitting ἐν before τοῖς ἐπιτρέψασι with Schneider, Foss and Ussing. Foss καὶ φράζειν (for βαδίζων) ἐν ταῖς ὁδοῖς, τὰς διατάς κρίνειν (for κρίνειν), τοῖς ἐπιτρέψασι. Ussing on his own conj. καὶ ὑπτιάζειν τὰς διατάς κρίνειν τοῖς ἐπιτρέψασι, ‘haughtily declines (superbe abnuere) to decide cases’ &c: omitting the words ἐν ταῖς ὁδοῖς as corrupt: Petersen suspects them also. Ast μνηστῆσαι φράζειν (for φάσκεν)· καὶ τὰς διατάς κρίνειν ἐν ταῖς ὁδοῖς· rejecting ἐν τοῖς ἐπιτρέψασι altogether.

2. μισθωμένους.] So Foss and Ast with most mss.: μεμισθωμένους, Hottinger, Sheppard, Ussing, Petersen. Ast’s objection to μεμισθωμένους, that it could only mean mercede conductos, whom therefore the hirer has a right to summon at an early hour, is not convincing, since it is conceivable that μεμισθωμαι, like γέγραμμαι, etc., may have been used as a Perfect Middle, and that οἱ μεμισθωμένοι τι may have meant qui aliquid conduxerunt. But the present μισθωμένους is better as denoting that the bargain is still in progress.

3. μή λαλεῖν τοῖς ἐντυγχάνουσι, κάτω κεκυφώς. ὅταν δὲ αὐτῷ δόξῃ, ὄνω πάλιν.] So Foss and Ussing. Vulg. ὅταν δὲ αὐτῷ δόξῃ ἐστιῶν (and so Shepp.). PVat. ὅταν δὲ αὐτῷ δόξῃ, ὄνω πάλιν· καὶ ἐστιῶν κ.τ.λ. There can be no doubt that the words ὄνω πάλιν in the PVat., if not sound, at least represent something which stood between δόξῃ and καὶ ἐστιῶν, and contrasted the conduct of the ὑπερήφανος in not speaking to those he met with some other feature of his conduct. I once conjectured for ὄνω πάλιν, ἀνακαλεῖν: 'When he walks in the streets he will not speak to those he meets, keeping his head bent down; or, when so it pleases him, will call them back.'

4. διαθεῖν.] So the mss.: Ussing, Sheppard, Ast. Ast conj. διαθεῖν. Foss reads διαθεῖναι, which he speaks of as a 'conjecture,' but without naming Sheppard, to whom it is due.

5. ληψόμενος.] So Foss, Ussing. Sheppard ληψόμενος with the mss. Ast ληψόμενος.

V.

Almost every editor has taken a different view of the order in which the clauses between λαλεῖν οὐ μισεῖν and ἀκούσας τι μὴ προσποιεῖσθαι should be arranged. Foss has been the boldest in transposing; Ussing has adhered most nearly to the mss. I have observed absolutely the order of the sentences in the mss. In writings of this kind, where every sentence has an independent point and is not necessarily in direct connexion either with what precedes or with what follows, that order of the clauses which is found in the manuscripts ought not, surely, to be disturbed without strong reason. In the present case the arrangement which has authority seems at least as good as any which has been effected by conjectural changes.

1. λαλεῖν, οὐ μισεῖν.] Ast, with one ms., φιλεῖν, οὐ μισεῖν. But λαλεῖν is both more probable and more graphic. Ussing encloses οὐ μισεῖν in brackets. Hartung proposes ὡς οὐ μισῶν.

2. πρὸς τοὺς ἀδικουμένους.] Ussing ingeniously (but unnecessarily) conjectures πρὸς τοὺς ἀδικ[α ἡγ]ουμένους, 'to those who think that the things said against him are unjust.' Foss, who transposes the clause to a place after συλλυπεῖσθαι ἡττωμένους, reads πρὸς αὐτοὺς ἀδικουμένους—i. e. οἱς ἐπέθετο λάθρα.

3. καὶ λέγειν ἑαυτὸν ἑτέρου ἀκηκοέναι.] Petersen's conjecture, adopted by Ussing with the change of λέγειν into λέγει γάρ. It is the best correction which has been made of a hopeless passage. The mss. give λέγει ἑαυτὸν ἑτερον γεγονέναι, which Casaubon vainly tried to explain. 'He says that he has become another person:' i. e. has been mistaken for another, whose words or actions have been imputed to him. 'Vous me prenez pour un autre.' Clearly this will not do: but Foss adopts it, with λέγεις for λέγειν. Ast καὶ λέγειν, αὐτὸν ἑτερον γεγονέναι: 'he will say 'To think that he (the person from whom his friend has heard the story) should have changed so completely!',—i.e. 'to think that the man who told you this story should have told me a story so different.' This is worse than the vulgate itself. I once conjectured καὶ λέγει αὐτὸ (for εαυτὸν) ἕτερον γεγονέναι, 'You describe the occurrence as having been of a different sort;' which agrees well with what immediately follows,—'This, however, was not the story that he told me.' But, for this sense, we should have expected ἕτερα rather than ἕτερον: and I now prefer Petersen's emendation.

4. εὐρεῖν ἔστι τοῦ εἰρωνος.] The two best mss (Paris A, B) have εὐρεῖν ἔστιν οὐ χεῖρον ἐν. Vulg., οὐ χεῖρον ἔστιν εὐρεῖν οὐδέν—probably a conjecture adapted to the old barbarous interpretation which made the accusatives πλοκάς καὶ παλιλλογίας (really governed by εὐρεῖν) depend on πιστεῖς. Foss εὐρεῖν ἔστιν, οὐ χεῖρον οὐδέν. This would do, if it were possible that εὐρεῖν ἔστι could stand alone for εὐρεῖν ἔστιν ἐν τῷ εἰρωνι. There is great probability in Ussing's conjecture that ΕΞΙΤΙΝΟΤΧΕΙΡΟΝΟΝ is an old corruption of ΕΞΙΤΙΟΤΕΙΡΩΝΟΣ.

VI.

1. προσπόλησις.] So Foss and Ussing,—Foss assigning the emendation to Auber (ed. 1582) and Reiske; Ast, to Schneider. Ast himself keeps the vulg. προσδοκία: but believes that the text originally had προσπόλησις ἀγαθῶν οὐκ ἐντων πρὸς δόξαν ('with a view to reputation'), and that προσδοκία arose from these words having been omitted and then written in the margin. I doubt if a Greek writer could have said πρὸς δόξαν in this sense: he would have said rather ἐνεκα δόξης or ἐπὶ δόξῃ.

2. ἐν τῷ δαίγματι.] Vulg. ἐν τῷ διαφύγματι: explained by Coray as the isthmus joining the Peiraeus to the mainland; by Ussing, as a mole dividing the two parts of its great basin (the Kantharus and the Emporium). Casaubon conj. δαίγματι, which Ast adopts. The topography of the Peiraeus is well known from ancient writers; but nowhere is τὸ διάφυγμα mentioned, whereas τὸ δαῖγμα exactly suits the context. This, however, would not in itself be a sufficient reason for adopting the emendation, were it not intrinsically probable.

3. Ἀλεξάνδρου.] The mss. have Εὐάνδρου, corrected by Auber to Ἀλεξάνδρου. He has been followed by Casaubon and by all subsequent editors except Goetz and Sheppard. The latter thinks, with Coray, that Evander may have been some general of Alexander of whom we know nothing. But the fact that we know nothing of him is in itself the best argument against the reading. The names of Alexander's generals, the names of all who were prominent during his period, are known from the detailed narratives of Plutarch, Arrian and Quintus Curtius. Nowhere is an Evander named to whom this allusion could refer. It is difficult to suppose that there can have been a military leader so universally known that a braggart, incapable of selection and attracted only by the largest names, should boast to a chance companion of acquaintance with him; and of whom not a word is said in the full histories of the time which have come down to us. That the age of Alexander is referred to is shown, of course, by the allusion to Antipater.

4. καὶ ὥς αὐτῷ εἶχε.] Schneider thought that some such adverb as φιλικῶς was wanted, and Ussing that αὐτῷ ought to be πρὸς αὐτόν. But cf. Xen. Cyr. vii. 5. 58, ἐννοῶν οὐτι... παρασκευάζετο οἰκῆν ἐν πόλει τῇ μεγίστῃ τῶν φανερῶν, αὕτη δὲ οὕτως ἔχει αὐτῷ ὥς πολεμωτάτῃ αὖν γένοιτο, 'was so disposed to him that it was likely to become most hostile.'

5. τριττὰ δὴ.] PVat.: Foss, Ussing.—In the collation of the PVat. by Siebenkees τριττὰ δὴ was wrongly reported as τρίτων ἡδὴ, whence Ast's conjecture τὸ τρίτων ἡδὴ, adopted in his own text and in Sheppard's.

6. περαιτέρω ὥς φίλος ὢν πλεῖν ἢ προσήκει Μακεδόσι.] Vulg. περαιτέρω φιλοσοφείν προσήκει Μακεδόσι, which it has been attempted to explain 'the Macedonians ought to have been more thoughtful' (i.e. 'than to offer me a privilege which would make me unpopular at Athens'). Schneider was for changing Μακεδόσι to Μακεδόνων, 'ultra quam Macedones sapere decebat.' The sense thus extracted (or rather extorted) from φιλοσοφείν is, I think, impossible. Ussing's correction of φιλοσοφείν to φίλος ὢν πλεῖν appears to me not only very brilliant but almost certain. The ὥς which is then wanted before φίλος might easily have dropped out after the final ω of περαιτέρω. The omission of ἢ before προσήκει would have been a natural result of the corruption of φίλος ὢν πλεῖν to φιλοσοφείν. προσήκει for προσῆκε is Ussing's.

7. ἑξακοσίας.] The vulg. ἑξακοσίους was the mistake of a copyist who was puzzled by the ordinary omission of δραχμῆς, and referred the numeral to τοῖς ἀπόροις τῶν πολιτῶν.

8. προσελθὼν δὲ τοὺς ἱπποὺς τοὺς ἀγαθοὺς τοὺς πωλοῦσι.] Vulg. προσελθὼν δ' εἰς τοὺς ἱπποὺς τοὺς ἀγαθοὺς πωλοῦσι: the PVat. inserts τοῖς before πωλοῦσι. I cannot persuade myself that προσελθὼν εἰς τοὺς ἱπποὺς is Greek; and have little doubt that the preposition was inserted by a scribe who did not see that προσελθὼν was to be taken with the dat. τοῖς πωλοῦσι which governs τοὺς ἱπποὺς τοὺς ἀγαθοὺς. So c. iv. (vulg. xxiv.) προσελθεῖν οὐδενί, c. xvii. (vulg. xi.), ἡττημένῳ προσελθεῖν, etc. This is Sheppard's view, who, however, puts τοῖς before τοὺς ἱπποὺς. It seems unnecessary to move it from its place in the PVat. ms.

VII.

1. καὶ πλαστόκις δὲ ἀποκείραται.] The passage which follows here, down to the words τούτου ἐστὶν ἡ παλαιόστρα, stands in the mss. at the end of c. II. (vulg. c. v.) περὶ ἀρεσκείας. That it is foreign to the character of the ἀρεσκος has been allowed by almost all commentators since Casaubon except Coray and Ussing. (Petersen, in printing it with the chapter περὶ ἀρεσκ., is merely performing his editorial duty to the mss., and does not enter upon the further question.) It must suffice here to point out the broad distinction between the ἀρεσκος and the μικροφιλότιμος, on which depends the unsuitableness of this passage to the former. Both are vain; but the ἀρεσκος desires to be popular for his qualities; the μικροφιλότιμος, to be admired for his advantages. Among those who agree in rejecting the passage from the chapter περὶ ἀρεσκείας two views prevail. Casaubon, followed by Schneider and others, supposes it to be a fragment of a chapter περὶ βαναυσίας or ἀπειροκαλίας, 'Of Vulgarity.' Ast, Foss and others assign it to this chapter περὶ μικροφιλοτιμίας,—Ast adding it at the end after εὐημερεῖ,—Foss introducing it after Διόθωψ ἔσται. I agree with Foss, except that I do not separate the clause καὶ ἀποδοῖδος μὲν ἀργυρίου, κ.τ.λ., from that in which the Aethiopian slave is mentioned, and with which it is, I think, closely connected in sense.

2. ξένους δὲ ἐπιστάλματα εἰς Βυζάντιον ἀλμάδας.] Vulg. ξένους δὲ εἰς Βυζάντιον ἐπιστάλματα. As Ast perceived, a word has fallen out here, denoting that special thing which was sent to Byzantium, as the dogs to Cyzicus and the honey to Rhodes. He himself guessed πέμματα, 'sweetmeats.' Another conjecture made by Foss appears so good that I have adopted it in the absence of anything certain. ἀλμάδες, pickled olives, were among the regular Athenian exports, and ἀλμάδας might easily have fallen out if ἐπιστάλματα had been written by mistake after Βυζάντιον. Foss himself discards ἐπιστάλματα, reading εἰς Βυζάντιον ἀποστέλλειν ἀλμάδας. But ἐπίσταλμα is a perfectly good word in the sense of ἐπεσταλμένον τι, i. e. a commission given by the person abroad to his friend at Athens; and is supported by the contrast with ἀγοράζειν αὐτῷ μὲν μηδέν. He buys, not for himself, but on commission for others. ἐπιστέλλειν would mean 'sends as presents;' and the contrast would then be less clear. Ussing, on his own conjecture, ξένους δὲ εἰς Βυζάντιον ἐπισκάλματα, (a word which does not occur) 'leathers for rowlocks.'

3. παλαιστριαῖον.] So Foss, Petersen, Ussing, with the best mss. Others παλαιστρικόν: Ast παλαιστρικῆν.

4. ἐπισιέναι ἐπὶ τῷ εἰπεῖν τὸν ἕτερον τῶν θεωμένων πρὸς τὸν ἕτερον.] In the mss. there is a lacuna. Vulg. εἰπεῖν ἐπὶ τῶν θεωμένων πρὸς ἕτερον; the two best mss. (Paris A, B) having ἐπεισιν for εἰπεῖν, and πρὸς τὸν ἕτερον for πρὸς ἕτερον. Both ἐπεισιν (i. e. ἐπεισιέναι) and εἰπείν are prob. right. The first τὸν ἕτερον was omitted by a copyist who saw that the words were coming after τῶν θεωμένων, and did not see that they were wanted twice. Foss's restoration seems almost certain. Ussing gives ὅστερον ἐπεισιν ἐπὶ τῷ εἰπείν τινα (for τὸν ἕτερον) τῶν θεωμένων: but ἐπεισιν is against the uniform structure of all these Characters, which are strings of infinitives: and τινα πρὸς τὸν ἕτερον is awkward.

5. κλάδος Μελιταῖος.] So Sheppard and Foss, with the mss. Toup's conjecture καλὸς Μελιταῖος has been adopted by Ast (writing ὁ καλός), Petersen and Ussing. If the μικροφιλότιμος had inscribed upon his dog's grave 'The Beautiful Melitean,' he would have been caricaturing the well-known formula of disconsolate lovers: e. g. Luc. Amor. 16 (where the beloved object is Aphrodite herself) 'Every wall was scored, every tree with soft bark proclaimed 'Aphrodite the Beautiful.' This would have been a joke quite foreign to the spirit of the pompous μικροφιλότιμος. The two instances of καλός in epitaphs quoted from Iamblichus (in Photius pp. 246, 7) only show that this use of it was rare.

6. ἐν τῷ Ἀσκληπιοῦ.] The mss. ἐν τῷ Ἀσκληπιῷ. Ast τῷ Ἀσκληπιῷ. Foss, Ussing, Sheppard, ἐν τῷ Ἀσκληπιεῖ.

7. στιλπνῶν καὶ ἀλείφων.] Vulg. στεφανοῦντα ἀλείφειν: PVat. στεφανοῦντα ἀλείφειν. The corruption of the passage probably lies beyond any remedy which can now be applied to it. Ast reads στεφανῶν καὶ ἀλείφων, referring τοῦτον to Asclepius: but clearly it refers to δακτύλιος. Foss's στιλπνῶν ('burnishing') for στεφανῶν is the best attempt at emendation which has been made. στιλπνός 'glistening' is common enough, and the verb has the authority of Epictetus in the 1st century. Ussing suggests τοῦτον ἐκτρίβειν σμήγματι (unguent) καὶ ἀλείφειν.

8. ἰθύομεν οἱ πρυτάνεις τῇ μητρὶ τῶν θεῶν τὰ ἱερὰ ἄξια καὶ καλὰ.] Vulg. ἔθ. οἱ πρυτ. τὰ ἱερὰ τῇ μ. τῶν θ. ἄξια καὶ καλὰ. PVat. ἔθ. οἱ πρυτ. τὰ ἱερὰ τῇ μ. τῶν θεῶν τὰ γὰρ ἄξια καὶ τὰ ἱερὰ καλὰ. Ussing gives, I think, the true account of confusion in the PVat. First τὰ γὰρ was written for τὰ ἱερὰ: then τὰ ἱερὰ was added in the margin, and thence crept in wrongly before τῇ μητρὶ and again before καλὰ. Foss, emending the PVat., reads ἔθ. οἱ πρυτ. τῇ μ. τῶν θεῶν καὶ ὑμεῖς ἔχεσθε τὰ ἀγαθὰ τὰ γὰρ σφάγια (for ἄξια) καὶ τὰ ἱερὰ καλὰ.

VIII.

1. ἥρφα.] Meier conjectures Ἑρμαῖα, which Foss adopts.

2. αἰρεῖν.] Vulg. αἰρεῖσθαι: which Ast renders 'bovem capessere, bovi manum inicere:' and in this sense the commentators generally seem to acquiesce. But though in the Iliad (16. 140) we have ἐγχοσ εἰλετο, 'he took (his own) spear,' &c., it is improbable that in Attic prose αλπεῖσθαι could mean 'to seize.' The word, and perhaps the passage, is corrupt. In the mean time, to make, at least, sense, I write αλπεῖν.

3. ἐν δεκάταις συνάγειν τοὺς μετ' αὐτοῦ συναυλῆσοντας.] The PVat. which alone has this clause, gives καὶ ἑνδεκα λιταῖς συνάγειν τοὺς μετ' αὐτοῦ συναύζοντας, which is nonsense. Ast conjectures καὶ ἐν δεκάταις συνάγειν τοὺς μετ' αὐτοῦ ῥσοντας: Foss καὶ ἐν δεκάταις σὺν αὐληταῖς συνάγειν τοὺς μετ' αὐτοῦ συνάζοντας. I have taken Ast's ἐν δεκάταις, and for συναύζοντας written συναυλῆσοντας. The υ in συναύζοντας preserves a trace of this. If λ had been left out by accident, Η would speedily have been corrupted to Ξ.

4. παῖειν.] Mss. πέζειν: Schneider παίζειν, and so most editors. Ast proposes καὶ μακρὸν ἀνδριάντα παλεῖν (so Pauw), καὶ πρὸς τὸν ἑαυτοῦ ἀκλόουθον διατοξεύεσθαι, κ.τ.λ.: Coray πιέζειν: see Notes.

5. κελεύειν.] The insertion of this word, which is not in the mss., but which (or something like it) the sense demands, was proposed by Reiske. Schneider introduced it in his 1st ed. only to eject it in his 2nd. It is now adopted by Foss, Petersen and Ussing.

6. ὥσι πλησίον.] πλησίον is wanting in the PVat., which has, however, a lacuna after ὥσι. Foss, followed by Ussing, inserts it on conjecture. Ast proposed ἔωσι for ὥσι, Schneider παρώσι, Foss formerly ἔωσι.

IX.

1. αὐτόν.] So Vulg.: Foss, Petersen, Ussing αὐτόν. But the usual phrase was ἀναδέχομαι τινι: Polyb. v. 16. 8 seems to be the only example of ἀναδέχομαι τινα in this sense: and I have no doubt that αὐτόν (referring to ὁ τὴν δίκην ὠφληκώς) is right. Then, however, we must write ὠφληκτός, not ὠφληκτότα, for προσελθών could not in prose be followed by an acc. of the person: it has the dat. in cc. iv. (vulg. xxiv.) xvii. (xi.) and (prob.) vi. (xxiii.) The same correction was proposed by Pauw in his ed. of 1737. Ast cuts the knot by omitting αὐτόν altogether.

2. τόκον.] Vulg. τόμον: but one of the best mss. has τόκον, and, since Ast, this has been universally adopted. To request 'a slice' at a season of feasting might be ἀνασχυντον, but would not be ἄκαιρον.

3. ἑτέρου.] Vulg. ἐταίρου: Foss ἑτέρου, with several mss., including Paris A, B, and so Petersen and Ussing.

X.

1. ἑνοτάς.] Mss. ἐν τινι στάς. Ast supposes this to be a corruption of ἀναστάς, which he omits after ἐλέγχεσθαι, and puts here. He thinks that an annotator wrote in the margin, as a note upon ἀνάστας, —ἐν τινι στάς: 'in one manuscript there is στάς:' but this is more ingenious than probable. When anything beside the variant itself was added, it was usually γρ. (γράφεται:) no copyist could have written ἐν τινι in that sense. Foss reads, on his own bold conjecture, συνδικήσας. Reiske's ἐνάστας is the best correction that has been suggested.

2. καὶ οὐκ.] Ast arbitrarily omits καὶ.

3. εἰ ποτίσαι.] Mss. εὐτρεπίσαι, 'to arrange:' which Ast explains 'in lecto iacentem attollit et ita componit (hoc est enim εὐτρεπίσαι, i. q. μετεωρίσειν ap. Hippocratem) ut commodè bibere possit.' But this is to make the word mean too much. No one could see that a breach of the doctor's order against giving the patient wine was hidden in εὐτρεπίσαι. Foss's emendation, εἰ ποτίσαι, is very brilliant, and, I think, almost certain. Ussing hesitates to take it, and suggests ἀναρπίσαι, 'febris ardorem in aegroto excitare;' which few will prefer.

XI.

1. πανούργιον.] PVat (which alone has this clause) καὶ πανουργίων τοῦ πάππου καλεῖν. Various corrections of πανουργίων have been tried: Foss's πανουργιον ('little rascal') is the least unsatisfactory and improbable. Schneider πανουργότερον: Petersen clumsily πανουργίων πλείτερον. Ast suggested πᾶν ἔργον τοῦ πάππου, 'das ganze Wesen des Grosspapas.' He and Ussing take πάππου to be the genitive of πάππος. But surely it is the gen. of πάππας.

2. ποῖα τις ἡμέρα:] Vulg. εἰπέ μάμμη, ὡς ποῖα ἡμέρα με ἔτικτες; PVat. εἰπέ μάμμη, δὲ ὠδινε καὶ ἔτικτες με, τίς ἡμέρα; From a combination of these Foss reads ποῖα τις ἡμέρα; and so Petersen (but adding ἦν unnecessarily.)—[Here there follows in the PVat. a hopelessly corrupt clause, about which only one thing is clear, that the ἀήδια consists in the coarseness; and which I have not translated:—καὶ ὑπὲρ αὐτῆς δὲ λέγειν ὡς ἡδύ ἐστι, καὶ ἀμφοτέρα δὲ οὐκ ἔχοντα οὐ ῥάδιον ἀνθρώπον λαβεῖν: et pro matre respondere dulcem esse rem (sc. τὸ παιδοποιεῖν); neque vero facile hominem invenire qui alterum (τὸ ἡδὺ) sine altero (τὸ λυπρὸν) habeat: i. e. ἡ παιδοποιούσα ἡδεύεται, ταύτην ἀνάγκη καὶ τίκτουςαν ὠδινεῖν. Ast, Foss, Petersen, Ussing have all exercised their ingenuity on the sentence. But none of them has got out a more intelligible sense than that which the reading of the ms. itself gives.]

3. καὶ λέγειν ὅτι ψυχρὸν ὕδωρ, κ.τ.λ.] The passage from here to the end is very corrupt. Ast transfers it to the end of c. vi. (XXIII.) περὶ ἀλαζονείας. But there is no reason to doubt that it belongs to the ἀηδῆς. The ἀλαζών boasts of great things; the ἀηδῆς, boasting of his cool cistern and his kitchen-garden, does not rise to the magnificence of the ἀλαζών. This is mentioned merely as one of the particular traits in which is seen his general characteristic—Illbreeding.

4. λάχανα πολλά ἔχων καὶ ἀπαλὰ.] Here the PVat. (alone) adds ὥστε εἶναι ψυχρόν: whence Foss conjectures ὥστε [ἀεὶ τὸν ὄνον] εἶναι ψυχρόν. Ussing leaves a lacuna, but thinks that we should read κῆπος λαχ. ἔχ. π. καὶ ἄ. κρείττων ἐστὶν ἢ μάγειρος, κ.τ.λ. To me there seems no doubt that the words ὥστε εἶναι ψυχρόν were a gloss upon λακαῖον.

5. μεστή γὰρ δέλ.] Mss. μεστή γὰρ ἐστι: Foss, Dübner and Hartung μεστήν γὰρ δέλ. The sense seems to require δελ: but there is no reason for changing μεστή to μεστήν.

6. καὶ ξενίζων δὲ δέξαι.] Foss needlessly transposes the words ξενίζων δέ to a place before ὅτι ἡ οἰκία αὐτοῦ, and inserts φῆσαι after them.

7. καὶ παρακαλῶν δὲ ἐπὶ τοῦ ποτηρίου εἰπεῖν ὅτι τὸ τέρψον τοὺς παρόντας παρίσκειν αὐτοῖς, κ.τ.λ.] Vulg. καὶ παρακαλεῖν δὲ ἐπὶ τοῦ ποτηρίου ὅτι τέρψον τοὺς παρόντας: omitting all that follows, which is only in the PVat. ms. Ast understood this: 'He will exhort (the parasite) with the words 'Amuse the company.' But the ὅτι before the imperatīvum is questionable in classical Greek: and τὸ τέρψον, the reading of the best ms., is no doubt right.

XII.

1. αὐτὰ.] Vulg. ἔχειν γὰρ καὶ τὸν πατέρα καὶ τὸν πάππον: PVat. ἔχειν γὰρ αὐτὸν καὶ τὸν πατέρα καὶ τὸν πάππον. Dübner altered αὐτὸν to αὐτοῦ: Meier, whom Foss follows, to αὐτὰ. Petersen, keeping αὐτόν, makes the strange mistake of translating it as if it were αὐτός.

2. αὐτοῦ.] PVat. (which alone has this clause) αὐτὸν τὸ γένος. Foss, Petersen and Ussing follow Siebenkees in inserting εἰς before τὸ γένος: Foss alters αὐτόν to αὐτῷ, Ussing to ἐαυτόν (reading εἰς τε γένος): I prefer αὐτοῦ.

3. χρώμενος χρεῖσθαι.] For these two words the vulgate has simply χρῆσθαι: the PVat. χρώμενος σφύζεσθαι ('to throb.') A great many corrections of σφύζεσθαι have been proposed, but none is probable: Ast φλύζεσθαι ('to boil over'), Petersen δρεσθαι, Coray σπογγιζεσθαι, Schweighäuser (after Visconti) σφιγγεσθαι, ('vestimento se constringere,') Foss σφαιρίζειν. One of the good mss. has χρεσθαι (which was another conjecture of Coray's). This makes good sense, and may have been corrupted through its likeness to χρώμενος.

XIII.

1. ἐστι δὲ ἡ ἀναισθησία.] Vulg. ἐστι δὲ καὶ ἡ ἀναισθησία. Ast follows Needham in omitting καὶ on the authority of several mss.

2. λαβὼν τι.] τι, which is wanting in the mss., was first supplied by Gesner, whom Foss, Ussing and most other recent editors follow, Petersen supplies ἀργύριον.

3. καὶ τὰ παῖδια ἱαντοῦ...ἐμβαλλειν.] Foss transfers this clause to the Character of the ὀψιμαθής, c. VIII. (XXVII.) But it is appropriate to the ἀναίσθητος, as a mark of stupid inadvertence: see Notes.

4. ἡδὺ γε τῶν ἀστρων ὀζει, ὅτι δὴ οἱ ἄλλοι λέγουσι τῆς γῆς.] The corruption in this passage is utterly desperate. Vulg. ἡδὺ γε τῶν ἀστρων νομίζει ὅτι δὴ καὶ οἱ ἄλλοι λέγουσι πίσεως. I have followed Ast in taking Coray's ὀζει for νομίζει, and Schneider's τῆς γῆς for πίσεως. Ast thinks that the words ὅτι δὴ καὶ οἱ ἄλλοι λέγουσι τῆς γῆς were added by a commentator who wished to explain the point of the ἀναισθησία: he says 'How sweet is the smell from the stars' [because, of course, other people say, 'from the earth.'] But it is more probable that ὅτι should be δτε. Foss fills out the sentences thus:—ἡδὺ γε τῶν ἀστρων [τὸ φῶς· φαινομένων δὲ τῶν ἀστρων,] δ τε καὶ οἱ ἄλλοι λέγουσι, πίσεως [μελάντερον εἶναι τὸ σκότος.] This is to rewrite Theophrastus: nor could δ τε καὶ οἱ ἄλλοι λέγουσι mean 'whatever other people may say.'—Every interpretation which has been proposed requires the omission of καὶ before οἱ ἄλλοι.

5. κατὰ τὰς ἑρὰς πύλας.] All the modern editors, except Ussing, have adopted the emendation of Meurse, 'Ἡρίας for ἑρὰς, 'the Gate of Tombs' (ἡρία). This is, I think, rash. For (1) the mss. agree on ἑρὰς: and we know that there was a gate at Athens called the Sacred: Plut. Sulla c. 14. (2) 'Ἡρίαι (for which Sylburg, acc. to Ast, suggested 'Ἡριαῖαι) is a strange adjective. The Etym. Magn. has, indeed,—'Ἡριά, 'A gate at Athens, so called because the dead were carried out at it to the tombs (ἡρία).' But this looks like guesswork; nor is there any mention elsewhere of an Erian Gate. Dr. Smith, in his excellent article Athenae in the Dict. of Geogr., places it conjecturally on the north of the city, 'since the burial-place of Athens was in the outer Cerameicus.' But this was a cemetery for those only who received public burial (Ar. Aves 395), and besides would be approached more conveniently from the N. W., where stood the Dipylum, and probably the Sacred Gate. Bekker states (possibly on the authority of Pollux IX. 15) that the space outside the walls between the Peiraic Gate on the S. W. of Athens and the Itonian Gate to the E. of it was a public burial-ground for the poor, for meteci and for foreigners; and in this space places the Erian Gate,—where Dr Smith, on better grounds, places the Melitean. But Bekker gives no proofs. (Charicles exc. to sc. IX.).

XIV.

I. καὶ δριστην δὲ ἄμα τοῖς ὑποζυγίοις ἐμβαλεῖν· καὶ κόψαντος τὴν θύραν ὑπακοῦσαι αὐτός.] The two Paris mss. and one other omit the words καὶ κόψαντος, and have no point after ἐμβαλεῖν. The other mss. have ἐμβαλεῖν τὴν θύραν καὶ κόψαντος τὴν θύραν ὑπακοῦσαι αὐτός. Ast follows Casaubon in altering the first τὴν θύραν into τὸν χόρτον. I agree with Foss, Petersen and Ussing in thinking that it can be understood. The confusion in the mss. probably arose thus. First the words καὶ κόψαντος dropped out. Then, as ἐμβάλλειν τὴν θύραν was a common phrase, it was assumed that τὴν θύραν belonged to ἐμβαλεῖν. When καὶ κόψαντος were replaced, they were accordingly inserted after, instead of before, τὴν θύραν: and the latter words were repeated by a transcriber who saw that κόψαντος required them, but did not see that they had merely to be transposed from the preceding clause.

2. λίαν λέγων λευρόν εἶναι.] Vulg. λίαν μὲν λυπρόν εἶναι (three mss. λυπηρόν). There is some doubt about the μὲν, which, Dübner says, looks in Paris A more like μενόν. Foss and Ussing adopt Casaubon's conjecture, and alter it to λέγων. I doubt whether this is right; but it is the best remedy that has been proposed. Of course 'λίαν μὲν λυπρόν εἶναι' might be treated as a quotation between inverted commas: but the omission of λέγων would be harsh; and for μὲν we should then expect γάρ. Various emendations of λυπρόν—which Ussing vainly defends as meaning 'sorry,' 'poor,'—have been attempted; ε. γ. λεπτόν, βυπαρόν, and Petersen's bolder διὰ τὸ μὴ λαμπρόν εἶναι. I suspect that the true word is λευρόν. The Rustic likes new, bright money: he complains that the coin offered to him is too old and worn.

3. ἀπαιτεῖν.] In the mss. the verb after τῆς νυκτός, which the sense demands, has been lost. Ast supplies αἰτεῖν, Foss ἐξαίτειν, Casaubon ἀπαιτεῖν, and so Ussing.

4. εἰ σήμερον ὁ ἀρχὼν νομηνίαν ἄγει.] Vulg. εἰ σήμερον ὁ ἀγὼν νομηνίαν ἄγει. Ast tried to make sense by omitting ὁ ἀγὼν, so that the subject to ἄγει should be ὁ ἀπαντῶν. I have adopted Ussing's emendation, ὁ ἀρχων: see Notes.

5. καὶ τῆς αὐτῆς ὁδοῦ.] This clause stands in the mss. after ἐγκρούσαι. Foss and Petersen follow Schneider in placing it, as seems necessary, after ἀποκείρασθαι.

6. τοῦ ταρίχους.] Ast is right, I think, in reading with Sylburg τοῦ ταρίχους (partitive gen.) for τοὺς ταρίχους. The form ὁ ταρίχος is used by Herodotus: but in Attic (ε. γ. Ar. Eq. 1246, Ach. 967) τὸ ταρίχος, already used in this chapter, was far more common.

XV.

1. εἰτα θύσας.] Petersen shifts εἰτα to a place before πρὸς τοῦτον ἀπελθὼν in the preceding clause, and inserts καὶ before θύσας. But πρῶτον μὲν in the first clause appears to confirm εἰτα in the second.

2. τιμώτατε.] Vulg. τίμω: two mss. τιμώτατε. The conjecture of Salmasius, Τίβιε (a common slave's name), has been adopted by

Foss, Petersen and Ussing. But τιμιάτε, besides having authority, has more point. By it, as Ast says, 'impudentia hominis mirifice augetur.'

3. [ἰωμόν.] All the mss., except four of the best, have ζυγόν: but, as Ast says, this was probably an attempt to explain ἐμβάλλειν. The balance is τάλαντον, the beam, ζυγόν, the scales, πλάστιγγες. ζυγόν could not be used for πλάστιγγε.

4. καὶ εἰπεῖν ὅτι λέλονται, κἄτα ἀπιών, οὐδεμία σοὶ χάρις.] Vulg. καὶ εἰπεῖν ὅτι λέλονται ἀπιών κἀκεῖ οὐδεμία σοὶ χάρις. Pauw conjectured: καὶ εἰπειν, ὅτε λέλονται, ἀπιών· κἀλει, οὐδεμία σοὶ χάρις: 'he will say, when he has bathed and is going away: Summon me—I owe you no thanks:' i.e. if you want to get your fee, you must bring an action, for I do not consider that I owe you anything, having acted as my own bath-servant.' But the boast, ὅτι λέλονται, appears characteristic, and therefore I would not change ὅτι to ὅτε: and the advice to bring an action seems a rather cumbrous joke. Ast adopts κἀλει, but retains ὅτι. Foss alters εἰπεῖν to εἰπών, and for κἀκεῖ boldly substitutes κραγεῖν. My remedy is simple. By merely changing κἀκεῖ to κἄτα, and placing it before ἀπιών, perfectly good sense is obtained from the ms. text. Ussing alters κἀκεῖ to δὲ καί.

XVI.

1. κακῶς ἀκοῦσαι καὶ λοιδορηθῆναι δυνάμενος.] καί, which is wanting in the best mss., has been restored by most modern editors, and is undoubtedly right. Foss reads κακῶς ἀκοῦσαι, λοιδορηθῆναι δυνάμενός. He calls δυναμένους 'certissima coniectura': what it means, he does not explain, and I do not understand. But there can be little doubt that he and Ussing are right in taking λοιδορηθῆναι as a deponent aorist, having an active sense. Demosthenes so uses it in two places: (1) in Meid. p. 558 § 132 οἱ αὖ ἐδημογόρησε παρ' ὑμῶν..., κατηγορῶν καὶ φάσκων βνεῖδος ἐξελεῖν τὴν στρατιὰν ταύτην τῇ πόλει· καὶ τὴν λοιδορίαν ἣν ἐλοιδορήθη Κρατίνῳ περὶ τούτων. (2) in Coron. p. 1257 § 5 λοιδορηθέντος δ' αὐτοῖς ἐκείνου καὶ κακίσαντος αὐτοῦς.

2. προσωπείον μὴ ἔχων.] μὴ has been restored from two mss. by Meier, who however changes ἔχων to ἔχειν: and so Foss. Ussing rightly keeps ἔχων. Casaubon had conjecturally inserted οὐκ, and was followed by Ast.

3. καὶ τούτων δ'.] Vulg. καὶ τοῦτο δ': Ast καὶ τούτων δ': whom Ussing follows, but omits δ'.

4. τῶν περισταμένων τοὺς ὄχλους.] περίστανται usu. means 'they place themselves (stand) around:' but here, 'they place around themselves' hominum turbam circum se colligunt (Ussing). Compare παρίστασθαι, 'to draw over to one's own side.'

5. καὶ οὐκ ἀποδοκιμάζειν δέ.] Vulg. οὐκ ἀποδοκιμάζων δέ. Meier corrected the part. to the infin., and inserted καὶ before οὐκ: so Foss, Ussing retains the vulgate: but the infin. appears absolutely necessary. Observe that in negative clauses depending on ὅλος, δεινός we have in the Characters usually μή, but sometimes οὐ: e.g. c. III. (vulg. xv.) τοιούτος ὅλος...οὐκ ἔχεν συγγνώμην: c. IV. (XXIV.) τούτῳδε ὅλος...προσ-ελθεῖν πρότερος οὐδενὶ θελήσαι.

6. οὐδὲ κατήλων ἀγοραίων στρατηγεῖν.] Vulg. οὐδ' ἅμα πολλῶν ἀγοραίων στρατηγεῖν. Nothing can be made of the ἅμα. It is absurd to say that he does not disdain to be captain even of many ἀγοραῖοι at once, as if a more modest person would have been στρατηγός of one at a time. One German editor proposed to eject it altogether. Ast was for changing ἅμα πολλῶν to παμπολλῶν. But the context itself supplies, I think, the true remedy. The ἀγοραῖοι of whom this man is prince or patron are, it appears, the keepers of the small provision-shops in the market-place, of which he makes the round for the purpose of levying the interest on his loans. In ΟΤΑΔΑΜΑΠΟΛΛΩΝ is concealed, I am persuaded, nothing but ΟΤΑΞΕΚΑΠΗΛΩΝ, the corruption of the first ε into α having been followed by that of κ into μ. The idea of a host involved in στρατηγεῖν would lend countenance to the false πολλῶν.

7. ἐργώδεις δὲ εἰσι, τὸ στόμα εὐλυτον ἔχοντες.] Vulg. ἐργώδεις δὲ εἰσιν οἱ στόμα εὐλυτον ἔχοντες. I follow Ast in reading τό for οἱ. With οἱ the sentiment is general; with τό, the subject to εἰσι is οἱ ἀπονενοημένοι understood, and the sentence is what it was meant to be—a commentary on the chapter.

XVII.

1. τὰ μύρτα.] The reading of the two Paris mss., adopted by Foss, Petersen and Ussing. The rest (except one which has τὰ μύρα) give τὰ μήλα, which Ast prefers on the ground that ἀκρόδρυα is a generic term, including both shell-fruits and soft fruits; and that κάρνα—μήλα represent these two species. But the disjunctive ἢ is against this view.

2. περιμείναι κελεύσαι.] These words are preserved only in some of the inferior mss., but there seems to be little doubt of their genuineness.

3. ἡττημένῳ.] The mss. give ἡττωμένῳ. Schneider's conjecture ἡττημένῳ has been accepted by Ast, Foss, Petersen and Ussing.

4. καὶ ὀψωνεῖν...μισθοῦσθαι.] Foss has unnecessarily transferred this clause to c. I. (II.), inserting it after the words διακορῆσαι δυνατὸς ἀπνευστί. The mss. have ἐαυτόν: Casaubon's ἐαυτῷ has been adopted by most editors; Furlan's αὐτός by Ast.

5. μεθύσκεισθαι μάλλιν.] A long passage, now assigned by universal consent to c. XXVI (XXX.), καὶ ὀνοπωλῶν—παῖδες λάβωσι, used to follow here.

6. καὶ εἰς ὀρνιθοσκόπου.] The passage from here to the end stands in the mss. in c. XII. (XIX.), following the words εἰς ἀγορὰν ἐξελθεῖν. Ast, followed by Foss and most recent editors, has transferred it hither. Petersen (Introd. p. 46) thinks that it belongs to c. XI. (XX.). My own impression is that part of it, viz. as far as the words ὥστερ ἀστείον τι πεποιηκώς, belongs, as Ast thinks, to this chapter: the remainder, καὶ αὐλούμενος δέ, κ.τ.λ., to c. XI. (XX.). But there is no warrant for dissecting it in this manner. I have therefore dealt with the entire passage in the way approved by Ast and Foss.

7. ὥστερ ἀστείον τι πεποιηκώς.] ὥστερ ἀστείον τι is Bernard's excellent emendation (adopted by Petersen) of the mss. ὡς τεράστιον τι, which is usually explained 'something portentous:' the βδελυρός laughing as if he had done 'something of evil omen.' But it is more natural that he should laugh 'as if he had done something clever.' Ast's remark 'ὡς non est quasi, sed quia, quod,' will not bear close inspection. ὡς, in places such as this, expresses the view—correct or false—taken by the doer of the action.

8. τί οὐ ταχὺ παύσαιο.] This, the reading of the PVat. ms., is now generally adopted; as by Foss, Petersen and Ussing. The βδελυρός asks τί οὐ ταχὺ ἐπαύσω; which becomes in oratio obliqua τί οὐ ταχὺ παύσαιο. The sense is the same, but in a more lively form, as that given by the other mss., μὴ ταχὺ παύσαμένη. Coray and Ast altered this to τῇ ταχὺ παύσαμένη, supposing that the βδελυρός reproves the player for ceasing to play before he has ceased to sing.

XVIII.

1. πλώμιον.] So Foss, Petersen and Ussing, after Dübner, who found this form in all the mss. which he collated, including three of the best: vulg. πλώμιον.

2. εἰ ποιήσειεν ὁ Ζεὺς ὕδωρ.] πλεῖον, added after ὑδωρ in the vulgate, is omitted by the two Paris mss. and another of the best, as well as by some others of less authority. Fischer suggested (I think truly) that it was probably introduced to balance βελτίω. He is followed by Ast in rejecting it.

3. κὰν ὑπομένη...μὴ ἀφίστασθαι.] In the mss. this clause stands after σήμερον. Schneider was the first editor who transferred it to the place which it now occupies in nearly all editions. Ussing leaves it in its old position, and considers that the spurious addition begins at καὶ ὡς Βοηδρομιῶνος, κ.τ.λ.

4. τοὺς τοιοῦτους τῶν ἀνθρώπων.] Casaubon's conjecture that φεύγειν ought to be inserted here has been adopted by Foss. It seems unnecessary.

XIX.

1. ὑποβάλλαι, εἶπας σύ; μὴ ἐπιλάβῃ.] This, the reading of the vulgate, is retained by Ussing and Petersen (the latter, however, giving ἐπιβάλλειν); and seems decidedly preferable to that proposed by Casaubon, which several modern editors have adopted, ὑποβάλλειν εἶπας· σύ μὴ ἐπιλάβῃ. I cannot agree with Foss that the vulgate requires the insertion of καί before μὴ ἐπιλάβῃ. The words εἶπας σύ; μὴ ἐπιλάβῃ δὲ μέλλεις λέγειν, are closely connected in sense, and do not represent two distinct remarks. Two mss. have ἐπιβάλλειν, one ἐπιβαλεῖν: the rest ὑποβάλλει. Needham restored ὑποβάλλειν, which is now generally read.

2. ἀπογυμνῶσθαι.] The best mss. have ἀπογυμνῶσθαι, which Petersen endeavours to defend in the sense, 'when he has despoiled' (as the victor strips and despoils a slain foe)—a figure for 'vanquished;' but this will hardly do. Pauw conjectured ἀπογυμνώσης: see Il. 6. 264, μή μοι οἶνον ἄειρε μέλιφρονα...μή μ' ἀπογυμνώσης, μένος δ' ἀλκῆς τε λαθῶμαι. I think that this is probably right, and that the use of an epic word was meant to heighten the humour. The inferior mss. have ἀποκναίειν, which Foss reads: but it has the air of a gloss by some one who despaired of ἀπογυμνῶσθαι.

3. προμανθάνειν, τσαῦτα προσλαλῶν.] Vulg. προμανθάνειν τσαῦτα, καὶ προσλαλεῖν. The alteration of προσλαλεῖν to προσλαλῶν has been generally adopted: but the modes of dealing with the καί have been various. The obvious expedient of putting it before τσαῦτα and keeping προσλαλεῖν weakens the passage intolerably. Before προσλαλῶν it could only mean 'actually,' and such emphasis is not wanted: while the omission of the article before διδασκάλοις makes it unlikely that καί stood before τοῖς παιδοτρύβαις. Petersen suggests τσαῦτα δὴ (for καί): Foss, τσαῦτα καὶ [τοιαῦτα]. I agree with Needham that it is to be omitted altogether. When προσλαλῶν became προσλαλεῖν, καί was inserted by some one who thought that τσαῦτα belonged to προμανθάνειν.

4. πυθόμενος τὰ τῆς ἐκκλησίας.] Vulg. πυθόμενος τὰς ἐκκλησίας. It has been attempted to explain τὰς ἐκκλησίας as 'the days appointed for the meetings of the Ecclesia,' or 'the transactions in the Ecclesia;' but neither sense is tolerable. Ussing thinks that some words, connected with τὰς ἐκκλησίας by εἰς or πρός, have dropped out. I have adopted Petersen's conjecture of τὰ τῆς for τὰς. Foss writes, on his own conj., πυθόμενοις τὰς ἐκκλησίας.

5. τὴν ἐπ' Ἀριστοφάντος ποτε γενομένην τοῦ ῥήτορος μάχην.] It is now the general opinion that τοῦ ῥήτορος was added by some one who confused the archon of 330 B.C. with one or other of his two more distinguished namesakes, Aristophon of Azenia and Aristophon of Collytus: see Notes. Casaubon proposed τῶν ῥητόρων (i.e. Demosthenes and Aeschines): but such a change would be very rash.

6. καὶ τὴν Λακεδαιμονίων ἐπὶ Λυσάνδρου.] The best mss. have ὑπὸ, and so Ussing (in his notes: though by a misprint his text has ἐπὶ) and Petersen. But, as Ussing himself says, ὑπὸ is suspicious; 'quoniam non significatur (proelium) a Lysandro factum, Λυσάνδρῳ scribendum videtur.' I doubt whether a Greek would have said ὑπὸ Λυσάνδρῳ when he meant 'under (the leadership of) Lysander.' He would rather have said, στρατηγούτος Λυσάνδρου. The reading ἐπὶ in some of the inferior mss. is probably the true one. Ast and Hottinger questioned the genuineness of this clause; and, if I felt sure that they were right in referring μάχη to the oratorical duel between Demosthenes and Aeschines in 330 B.C., I should be inclined to agree with them. See Notes.

7. βουλόμενα.] The variant βουλόμενον, adopted by Foss, seems to spoil the sense.

8. λέγοντα, πάντα, λάλει τι ἡμῖν.] Vulg. λέγοντα ταῦτα, λαλεῖν τι ἡμῖν. Hartung's emendation of ταῦτα to πάντα, adopted by Ussing, seems nearly certain. Petersen prefers the Homeric ἄττα. Foss λέγοντα βαυκαλῶν λαλεῖν τι ἡμῖν. βαυκαλῶν is a late word meaning 'to sing a lullaby.' Ussing defends the imper. for infin. in prose by Plat. Crat. 426 B: Rep. v. 473 A. But it is an essentially poetical construction, and would be out of place in this short, plain sentence. I have therefore adopted the easy correction λάλει, which has often been proposed before.

XX.

1. πόθεν σύ, καὶ λέγεις τί; τί ἔχεις περὶ τοῦδε εἰπεῖν καινόν; καὶ ἐπιβαλὼν ἐρωτᾷν, μὴ λέγεται τι καινότερον; καὶ μὴν ἀγαθὰ γέ ἐστι τὰ λεγόμενα.] This is the reading of the vulgate, except that for τί ἔχεις it has καὶ ἔχειν. Three good mss. have καὶ πῶς ἔχεις: but πῶς ἔχεις εἰπεῖν καινόν is not Greek. Ussing therefore reads πῶς ἔχεις περὶ τοῦδε; and puts the words εἰπεῖν καινόν in brackets. To me it seems more likely that πῶς was inserted to mark a question after the second τί had been corrupted to καί. Before ἐπιβαλὼν four mss. have ὥς, which is without meaning: for ἐπιβαλὼν is simply 'following up,' 'repeating' his question. Foss rewrites the whole passage conjecturally: among other changes he gives ὥς ὑποβαλὼν.

2. καταβαλὼν τὸ ἦθος.] Casaubon conjectured μεταβαλὼν τὸ ἦθος. Ast renders the vulgate 'vultu demisso—blando et ita comparato ut alterum capiet.' If the text is right, this is probably the general sense; but ἦθος, though it sometimes denotes nearly what we mean by a man's 'air' or 'mien,' has nowhere the definite sense of 'countenance.' I understand—'giving a demure, subdued air to his whole bearing.'

3. ἀλλ' οὖν ἰσχυρός γε γινόμενος.] Ast follows Casaubon in inserting γε, which seems almost necessary, and which might easily have been lost before γινόμενος. Foss fills up the lacuna after γινόμενος with the words νῦν ὡς ἀσθενής ἐστι. I should have preferred simply ἀπώλυν or some equivalent word: but I rather suspect that the lacuna was intentionally left by the author. These broken utterances, dying away in an unfinished sentence, constitute the very art of the λογοποιός.

4. ποία γὰρ ἐν στοᾷ, ποίῳ δὲ ἐργαστήριῳ...οὐ διημερεύουσιν;] Vulg. ποία γὰρ οὐ στοᾷ...οὐ διημερεύουσιν. Schneider, feeling the want of ἐν, gave in his first edition οὐκ ἐνδιημερεύουσιν, and has been followed by Dübner, Hartung and Ussing. It seems better, with Ast, to change the first οὐ, which is awkward, into ἐν. On the strength of ποία στοᾷ, ποῖον ἐργαστήριον in some of the good mss., Foss reads:—ποία γὰρ οὐ στοᾷ, ποῖον δὲ ἐργαστήριον, ποῖον δὲ μέρος τῆς ἀγορᾶς οὐ διημερεύουσιν. But τίς τόπος οὐκ ἐστιν, οὐ διημερεύω; could not stand for τίς τόπος ἐστιν οὐ οὐ διημερεύω; and ποίῳ μέρει is in all the mss.

XXI.

1. ἀγωγή τῆς ψυχῆς.] So Ussing, with Casaubon. The mss. have ἀγών τῆς ψυχῆς: but ἀγών ἐς τὸ χεῖρον cannot be right.

2. Σωσιδημος.] This name is wanting in the mss., and was first supplied by Meier's clever conjecture, which Foss and Ussing have adopted. Ast, followed by Sheppard, spoils the passage by reading ἐπειτα (for ἐπειδὴ) δὲ ἐς τοὺς δημότας ἐνεγράφη.

3. καλεῖται γοῦν ἡ ψυχὴ Κορινθιακῶς.] PVat. (which alone has this clause) καλεῖται γοῦν ἡ ψυχὴ Κρινοκόρακα. Various attempts have been made to explain the corrupt word. The right clue is, I suspect, to be found in the fact that Κορυθία κῆρη was a synonym for ἐταῖρα (Plat. Rep. III. p. 404 D): cf. κορινθιάζεσθαι. The copyist first wrote Κρυθ—by mistake, leaving out the ο, then κορ in the margin; which came to be written in the text after Κρυθ, θ being then changed to ο. Κορυθ—thus became κρυνοκορ—. What the rest of the word was I do not pretend to say; but I believe that Κορινθιακῶς (from the adj. used by Xenophon etc.) represents the sense.

4. καὶ ἱκανὸς δέ.] Foss's correction, adopted by Ussing, of the corrupt καὶ κακῶν δέ.

5. ὑπὲρ ὧν οὐ πλανᾷ πρὸς ἐμὲ καὶ τούτους διεξιὼν.] PVat. (which alone has this clause) ὑπὲρ ὧν οὐ πλανᾷ πρὸς ἐμέ· καὶ τούτους διεξιὼν. I follow Ussing in writing τούτους for τούτους, and so connecting καὶ τούτους διεξιὼν with what precedes: Foss, in writing πλανᾷ for πλανᾷς. The change of a single letter will now give good sense: for οὐ read οὐ. The κακολόγος is always eager to agree with those who are depreciating the absent.

6. κίνες.] The word is wanting in the mss., but is printed conjecturally in most editions since that of Ast.

7. συνέρονται.] Meier's conjecture, adopted by Foss, for συνέχονται.

8. ἐπὶ θύραν τὴν αὐλαὸν ὑπακούουσι.] Petersen and Ussing have τῆν, instead of ἐπὶ, before θύραν. But ὑπακούειν θύραν is not Greek: and as the PVat., the sole authority here, has ἐπὶ θύραν, there is no excuse for omitting the preposition.

9. ἀνδρόλαλοι.] Foss cōhj. ἀνδρόλαβοι.

10. τάλαντα εἰσενεγκάμενη ἔξ ἧς παῖδιον αὐτῷ γέγονε.] PVat. τάλαντα εἰσενέγκαμεν ἢ προῖκα ἔξ ἧς παῖδιον αὐτῷ γεννα (sic: in marg. γέγονε.) Petersen emends thus: τάλαντα εἰσενεγκάμενη προῖκα ἔξ, ἢ τε παῖδιον αὐτῷ γεννῶ. His restoration of ἔξ is certain; but he ought to have seen that the very fact of its having dropped out is the strongest argument for the ἔξ ἧς of the ms. ἔξ dropped out because it was followed by ἔξ.

11. τοὺς οἰκέλους αὐτοῦ λοιδορήσαι.] So Foss, with the PVat. Other mss. have λοιδορεῖσθαι. If we read this (as Ussing and Petersen do), τοὺς οἰκέλους ought probably to be altered to τοῖς οἰκέλοις, since the Middle λοιδορεῖσθαι almost invariably takes a dat. of the object.

12. κακῶς λέγει ἀποκαλῶν παρρησίαν.] I follow Foss in placing the comma at τελευτηκόντων, and not at λέγειν, for two reasons: (1) an accus. in apposition with παρρησίαν, δημοκρατίαν, ἐλευθερίαν is required: this is supplied by (τό) κακῶς λέγειν. (2) We usually find κακῶς λέγειν τινά, but κακά λέγειν περὶ τίνος.

13. ποιῶν.] So the PVat. and Foss. Petersen and Ussing, ποιεῖν.

14. ὁ τῆς δυσκολίας ἐρεθισμός.] PVat. ὁ τῆς διδασκαλίας ἐρεθισμός. For διδασκαλίας Ussing suggests διαβολίας (a merely poetical form); Coray κακολογίας; but this is utterly improbable. Hottinger's δυσκολίας seems most likely. The copyist began δε—, then, seeing his mistake, started afresh; but as he did not erase the former, διδασκαλίας arose out of {δι}δυσκολίας. If the whole comment is spurious, the want of necessary connection between κακολογία and δυσκολία is no proof that the latter word did not stand here.

XXII.

1. ἐπιτήρησις παρὰ τὸ προσήκον τῶν δεδομένων.] The PVat. has περὶ τῶν προσηκῶς δεδομένων, from which Foss gets περὶ τῶν προσηκῶς δεδομένων. But προσηκῶς is, as Ast points out, merely a corruption of προσηκόντως, and this of προσηκον τῶν.

2. οὐ δίδωμι οὐχ οὐαῖ.] οὐχ before οὐαῖ is wanting in the mss. It was first inserted by Needham, who is followed by Ast, Sheppard and Ussing.

3. εἴ τι ὄγμ'.] So Petersen and Ussing. The mss. have οτι, which Foss takes from δοτις.

4. ἀπεσθιν.] Two mss. have ἀπέστην, which Petersen prints, and which Coray thought might have come from ἀπέστη.

5. ὅτε δὲ τὰργύριον ὀφέλλειν.] So (on Casaubon's conjecture) Ast, Sheppard, Ussing.—Foss keeps the mss. ὅτι, which Meier defended; but admits that ὅτε is a good emendation.

XXIII.

1. καὶ φέρειν αὐτὸς τὸ ἀργύριον καὶ κατὰ στάδιον καθίζων ἀριθμεῖν.] The mss. have φέρων, which Ussing keeps, omitting the καὶ before κατὰ στάδιον. It seems better, with Coray, Foss and Petersen, to read φέρειν.

2. κυλικούχιον.] Vulg. κοιλίουχιον: PVat. κυλιούχιον, and so Petersen and Ussing. Sylburg and Foss κυλικούχιον.

3. ὑπνοῦ τυγχάνειν.] Ast inserts here, Foss after ἐξαρκὴ γενέσθαι, the clause καὶ τοὺς δρους δέ... διαμένουσιν αὐτοὶ which usu. stands in c. XXIV. (x.). As Meier shows, it need not be moved. See Note 1 to c. XXIV.

4. δύωνται.] I do not see how the δύναμτο of the vulgate, which the editors pass by in silence, can stand. In those cases where ὅπως with opt. has reference to present time, the peculiarity is explained by attraction to a preceding optative: c. g. Aesch. Eum. 288, ἔλθοι—ὅπως γένοιτο τῶνδ' ἐμοὶ λυτήριος: 'may Athene come that she may prove my deliverer from these things'—where γένηται might have been expected, but γένοιτο is allowed on account of ἔλθοι: cf. Soph. Aj. 1222, Phil. 324. Here no such explanation is possible.

5. μόνον οὐ πυρώσας.] This is the reading of the PVat. (which alone gives the clause from ἀν δ' ἀρα οἰκίος το χρήσει); and I see no good reason for disturbing it. πυρούσθαι is used of gold standing the test of fire, Arist. Hist. An. III. 5. If it was said that the ἀπιστος actually submitted his cups to this test, there would be reason to suspect the text. But it says μόνον οὐ πυρώσας. It is no more meant that he actually puts them through the fire than that he actually weighs them, or takes security. He only looks as if he would like to do all three things. It is merely a humorous hyperbole to express his extreme reluctance to grant the loan.—Elaborate attempts have been made to emend πυρώσας. Orelli and Foss independently conjectured, for μόνον οὐ πυρώσας, δοῦν' ἐντυπώσας, 'having graven his name on the cups.' Foss and Petersen give in their texts μόνον ἐντυπώσας, understanding δνομα or something of the kind. Coray suggested ποσώσας. If a conjecture was to be made, a better one would, I think, have been μόνων οὐχ ὀρκώσας: but no conjecture is needed.

6. αὐτόν.] So Ast, Sheppard, Foss, Ussing for mss. αὐτό: Petersen αὐτῷ.

7. πόσου; κατάθου.] Mss. πόσου κατάθου. This probably corrupt passage is perhaps the most difficult in the Characters. The words μηδὲν πραγματεύου... συνακολουθήσω, found in the best mss., cannot on any sound principle of criticism be rejected as spurious; and it is clear that they represent the answer of the ἀπιστος to the buyer. κατάθου, then, is said by the buyer: but in what sense? I follow Schneider, Foss and Petersen in rendering it refer in tabulas. Cf. pseudo-Demosth. p. 1401: ταῦτα δὲ πάντα γέγραπται τὸν τρόπον ὃν τις ἂν εἰς βιβλίον καταθεῖτο. Schneider's view of the passage generally also seems to me, on the whole, the best. Three others should be noticed:—(1) Ast, following Casaubon and Coray, rejects μηδὲν πραγματεύου—συνακολουθήσω altogether. He reads ποσοῦ κατάθου, οὐ γὰρ σχολάζω πέμπειν:—i. e. 'Buyer. Reckon up the amount (and enter it in your books). Seller. Pay down; I have not time to send (to your house) for the money.' (2) Foss and Petersen differ from Schneider in reading πόσου [they mean ποσοῦ] καὶ κατάθου, 'Reckon up the amount and put it down,' instead of πόσου; κατάθου. (3) Ussing understands the passage, not of buying, but of borrowing. For πόσου κατάθου he would read something like πόσον χρόνον ἔτι κατέχω. A person who has borrowed something from the ἀπιστος says 'How much longer may I keep it? for I have not time to send it just yet.'

8. εἰπεῖν] inserted conjecturally by Foss, Petersen and Ussing. Schneider inserted λέγειν.

9. ἂν σὺ μὴ σχολάζῃς.] The μὴ, first inserted by Schneider, is adopted by Foss and Petersen. The sense seems to require it, as Ast saw; but he rejected the whole sentence.

XXIV.

1. πάντα φάσκων εἶναι ἀγαν.] So Ast, Foss and Ussing. The best mss. have φάσκων, and omit ἀγαν. From Ast's note, however, and from the fact that Foss prints it without comment, I infer that there is other authority for it. Ussing prints it in smaller type, as a conjectural supplement.

2. χύτραν ἢ λοπάδα.] After χύτραν the two Paris mss. have εἶναι, out of which Petersen gets παλαιάν. It seems more likely that it has merely come in by mistake from the last clause.

3. ἐκβαλούςας.] So, with the best mss., Foss, Petersen and Ussing. Cf. c. XVII. (XI.) ἐκβαλεῖν τὸ ποτήριον. There is in Greek no word which precisely renders our 'to drop' (accidentally). This must, in strictness, be expressed by a periphrasis with πίπτειν. But ἐκβάλλειν seems to have been conventionally used nearly in that sense: see II. XIV. 419 etc. Ast, with some inferior mss., reads ἀποβαλούσης, which would have a more general meaning; 'having lost:' and is less graphic than ἐκβαλούσης.

4. †χρήσαι†.] Mss. χρωνύειν, but one χρωνύειν, and one ῥωνύειν. Ast and Schneider read χράν: Casaubon conj. χράν τινί: others χράν οὐδενί, μηδενί, or ἐνί. But χράω, in the sense of lending, occurs only in the fut. and aor.: for the present Dem. p. 1250 uses κίχρημι: and so κίχρασθαι c. XXVI. (XXX.). Foss, from a 'glossarium ἀνέκδοτον,' gives χορηνύειν, and in c. VII. (XXI.) a kindred form χορηνύναι. Neither has much probability. In the absence of any likely emendation, I have given χρήσαι, in order at least to represent what was probably the sense.

5. θυλήματα.] So Ast and Foss. The word is known from Ar. Pax 1040. Petersen and Ussing keep the mss. θυλήματα, which does not occur elsewhere: and θυλή is a poetical form.

6. ὑπολυομένους.] So Ast and Foss, with several mss. As ὑπολυομένους in this context can be exactly illustrated from Aristophanes (see Note) it is astonishing that Petersen and Ussing keep ὑποδοιμένους, which, it may be safely said, is nonsense. Ussing explains it 'medio die, quo tempore ceteri in publico versantur, latebras quaerunt domique se conduunt, ne in vestimentorum elegantiam sumptus faciant.' It means, then, 'slinking into concealment!'

XXV.

1. περιουσία τις ἀφιλοτιμίας ἐς δαπάνην ἔχουσα.] Mss. περιουσία τις ἀπὸ φιλοτιμίας δαπάνην ἔχουσα. I follow Casaubon, Ast and others in correcting ἀπὸ φιλοτιμίας to ἀφιλοτιμίας (a word used by Aristotle); and Ussing in inserting ἐς before δαπάνην. Schweighäuser's ἀπουσία τις φιλοτιμίας has been adopted (silently) by Ussing. Foss reads περιουσία τις ἀποφιλοτιμίας δαπάνης ἔχουσα: but it is hard to believe in Fischer's ἀποφιλοτιμία, or that ἔχουσα could, in prose, stand with a genit. for ἔπῃχουσα. Casaubon's δαπάνην φεύγουσα is tempting; but, as Ast says, 'a vulgatae scripturae ductibus nimis recedit.'

2. τραγῳδοῖς.] Foss and Petersen give τραγῳδοῦς: but the dative of most mss. is undoubtedly right. Compare the common phrase καινοῖς τραγῳδοῖς, 'at the representation of the new tragedies:' Cic. Err. X. 31 gladiatoribus = ludis gladiatoriiis.

3. ἐπιγραφάμενος.] I have little doubt that Schneider was right in thinking that this was the true correction of the ἐπιγράψας μὲν in the mss.: 'having caused (midd.) his name to be inscribed upon it.' I do not think that μὲν could stand as a sarcastic comment upon the fact that, shabby as was the offering, he yet took care to secure credit for it. Petersen tries to get this sense by writing μή. Ussing more boldly μηδ' but this seems plainly wrong. The ἀνελεύθερος is one who wants to get as much glory as possible for his money. He would not fail to record his victory, but he would record it cheaply.

4. ἐκ τοῦ δήμου.] The mss. agree on this, and I have left it, as it can be taken with ἀναστάς. But I strongly suspect that we ought to read ἐν τῷ δήμῳ, referring to γυνομένων. Ussing wanted τῷ δήμῳ, referring to ἐπιδόσεων.

5. πλὴν τῶν ἱεροσόνων.] The PVat. has πλὴν τῶν ἱερέων: the other mss. πλὴν τῶν ἱερῶν. Meier's conjecture ἱεροσόνων, 'the parts reserved for the priest,' has been adopted by Dübner, Hartung and Foss. See Ameipsias ab. Athen. IX. p. 368 E, δίδοται μάλισθ' ἱερώσωνα | κωλή, τὸ πλευρὸν, ἡμικραὶρ' ἀριστερά: the ham, the ribs, and the left side of the face. Bekker Anecd. p. 44: ἱερώσωνα τὰ τοῖς θεοῖς ἐξαιρούμενα μέρη. Casaubon's ἱερών is adopted by Ussing: Petersen reads on his own conj. μηρίων.

6. ὅταν ᾖ Μουσέτα.] After ὅταν ᾖ the PVat. (which alone has this clause) inserts τοῦ ἀποτιθεῖναι καὶ τὰ παιδία, which is now universally rejected as a confused repetition of what has preceded.

7. τὴν κύκλῳ.] These words occur only in the PVat.: but Foss and Ussing seem right in regarding them as genuine. Cf. Plat. Lysis p. 203 A, πορεύεσθαι τὴν ἐξω τεύχους. Petersen emends ἀποκάμψαι (for -ας) ἐκ τῆς ὁδοῦ καὶ (for τὴν) κυκλῳ οἶκαδε πορευθῆναι.

8. ἐκ τῆς γυναικείας.] So the PVat., the sole authority here. Cobet, Variae lectt. p. 204, observes that ἀγοράς is to be supplied. Meier also defends it: and Petersen and Ussing receive it into their texts. Foss boldly writes eis τὰς ἐξόδους τὰς γυναικείας.

9. παλιμπήξει.] PVat. πάλιν πῆξει. Schneider was the first to write παλιμπήξει.

10. τὴν οἰκίαν ἐκκορήσαι καὶ τὰς κλῖνας καλλῦναι.] The mss. have οἰκίαν καλλῦναι—κλῖνας ἐκκορήσαι: and so Petersen and Ussing. Pauw's transposition of the verbs is adopted by Ast and Foss.

XXVI.

This chapter (usu. xxx.) is found complete only in the PVat.: but the passage καὶ οὐνοπαλῶν δέ...παῖδες λάβωσι stands, in those mss. which contain only the first 15 Characters, in the chapter on βδελυρία (usu. XI., in this ed. xvii.). The PVat. places that passage here, inserting in it two additional clauses, viz. (1) καὶ ἑαυτίον ἐλδοῦναι—πλείους ἡμέρας: (2) καὶ τῶν υἱῶν δὲ μὴ πορευομένων—παρὰ τοῦ χειρίζοντος.

1. περιουσία κέρδους αλσχροῦ.] So the ms. Ast says that the peculiarity consists in περιουσία standing for nimia cupiditas. It consists rather, I think, in κέρδος standing for cupiditas lucri. Cf. Soph. Ant. 222, ἀνδρας τὸ κέρδος πολλάκις διώλεσεν, 'the desire of gain has often ruined men.' Foss reads on his conj. περιποίησις, which means 'affectation of,' rather than 'effort to get.' Schneider inserted ἐπιθυμίας after περιουσία—clumsily. Hartung boldly, ἀπουσία φιλοτιμίας κέρδους ἔνεκα αλσχροῦ. Probably αλσχροῦ is a spurious addition.

2. διμοιρίαν.] So Petersen and Ussing: PVat. διμοιρον. The word διμοιρία is common: διμοιρον, in this sense, is unknown.

3. προϊκα ἐφιάσιν.] Vulg. ἀφιάσιν: but I think with Petersen and Ussing that ἐφιάσιν (sc. προϊκα θεᾶσθαι) is right.

4. εἰπὼν, σαπρὸν γε, κ.τ.λ.] Ast, Foss and Ussing omit the καί of the vulg. before εἰπὼν.

5. Φειδωνίῳ μέτρῳ.] PVat. φειδομένῳ: vulg. φειδωνίῳ, which is probably right, and which Ast and Ussing retain. See Notes.

6. σφόδρα ἀποψῶν.] In the vulgate these words stand after τὰ ἐπιτήδεια. The PVat. has σφόδρα δὲ ὑποσπῶν before τὰ ἐπιτήδεια. With Ussing I follow the vulgate for the words, and the PVat. as regards their place.

7. καὶ ὑποπρίασθαι φίλου δοκούντος πρὸς τρόπον πωλεῖν, καὶ ἐπιβαλὼν ἀποδόσθαι.] A passage too corrupt to be restored with much probability. The vulgate has simply ὑποπρίασθαι φίλου ἐπιλαβὼν ἀποδόσθαι: the PVat., ὑποπρίασθαι φίλου δοκούντος πρὸς τρόπου πωλεῖσθαι. I follow Ast and Foss in their general view of the sense, and in attempting to combine the vulgate and the PVat. Ast proposes ὑποπρίασθαι τι, φίλου διδόντος πρὸς τρόπον, καὶ ἐπιβαλὼν ἀποδόσθαι: 'he buys a thing privately, when a friend offers it on reasonable terms, and, having added to the price, sells it.' Foss, ὑποπρίασθαι φίλου δεδωκότος πρὸς τρόπου πωλεῖσθαι εἰτα ἐπιλαβὼν ἀποδόσθαι i. e. 'when a friend allows it to be sold reasonably.' In two points I would keep closer to the mss.: (1) in retaining δοκούντος: (2) instead of inserting εἰτα, I should write πωλεῖν καὶ for πωλεῖσθαι. The awkward passive is thus got rid of, and the loss of καὶ explained. Coray's ἐπιβαλὼν for ἐπιλαβὼν may be supported from Arist. Polit. I. II. 9, where ἐπιβάλλειν means to 'bid higher,' lit. 'to add to the price.' But the blot is πρὸς τρόπον. I much doubt whether πρὸς τρόπου πωλεῖν could mean 'to sell on reasonable terms:' though πρὸς τρόπου λέγειν (Plat. Rep. p. 470 C), means 'to speak reasonably.' The corruption probably lies deep.

8. ἀμολαι δὲ καλ.] So the vulgate, which Ussing seems right in following. ἀμέλει, in these Characters often adds spirit to the mention of an especially striking trait—here to the notice of a very shabby little artifice. 'It is just like him to.....' Petersen without comment gives καὶ χρὴ δέ: Foss καὶ χρέος δέ.

9. τὸν μῆνα ὅλον.] Ast leaves out these words, and reads below τὸν Ἀνθεστηριῶνα τὸν ὅλον.

10. παρὰ τοῦ χειρίζοντος.] Ast, Foss and Ussing leave the lacuna in the PVat. after τοῦ χειρίζοντος without attempting to explain it. Ussing says: 'desiderari aliquid apparet; nam necessario indicandum est quid administraverit ille quicum ratione putat.'

11. συναγόντων παρ' αὐτῷ ὑποθῆναι.] The ms. has παρ' ἐαυτῷ ὑποθῆναι: Ast's correction is adopted by Foss and Ussing. The latter seems right in omitting παρ' ἐαυτοῦ before διδομένων: it was probably the mere error of a copyist whose eye had wandered back to παρ' ἐαυτῷ. Foss seems right in altering ἐαυτῷ to αὐτῷ.

12. μὴ πέμψῃ.] So Ussing: the PVat. has προπέμψῃ,—the προ probably from the line before, πρὸ χρόνου τινός. Foss's προπέμψῃ is improbable.—μὴ, first added by Siebenkees, the earliest collator of the PVat. ms., is obviously wanted by the sense, and is read in all editions.

XXVII.

1. καὶ τοῦ κυβερνήτου ἀνακύπτων [μεν]† πυνθάνεσθαι εἰ μεσοπορεῖ.] ἀνακύπτων μὲν is the reading of the best ms., the PVat., and is printed by Foss, Petersen and Ussing. If it is right, it means, as Ussing says, that the δειλός had either covered his head or taken refuge below decks: 'et μὲν importunum, ut ait Schneider., necessario delendum.' The inferior mss. have ἀνακύπτωντος αἰσθάνεσθαι. Ussing suggests that τοῦ κυβερνήτου ἀνακύπτωντος might mean, 'when the steersman raises his head' (in order to see over something which obstructs his view). The πυνθάνεσθαι of the PVat. must of course be retained. But besides the oddness of ἀνακύπτωντος in this sense, there is a further objection: εἰ μεσοπορεῖ must then mean 'whether he is steering the middle course': 'diligentiam videas gubernatoris in angusto fredo versantis' (Ussing). Now μεσοπορεῖν naturally means 'to be in middle course'; in another sense—that of 'having come half way.' So Diod. XVIII. 34, μεσοπορεύωντων δ' αὐτῶν, 'in the middle of their voyage:' and so Menander (4. 320) used it. Clearly the Coward asks 'whether they are half-way yet.'—Casaubon read ἀνακόπτωντος (which Ast wrongly states to be the ms. reading). He understands: 'when the steersman changes the ship's course, the Coward asks whether he is keeping in mid-channel.' To this there are two objections: (1) that just stated—the sense given to μεσοπορεῖ: (2) the sense of ἀνακόπτωντος. ἀνακόπτειν ναῦν might, perhaps, have the meaning of ἀνακρούεσθαι, 'to back the ship:' compare the pass., said of a hesitating speaker, Luc. Nigr. 35, ἐξέπικτόν τε καὶ ἀνεκοπτόμην, 'I began to blunder and retract:' and Arat. Phaenom. 346, quoted by Ast, ἀνακοπτει νῆα, 'quod Germanicus verit, inhibet iam navita remos. But I do not see how it could mean 'to change the ship's course' in any other way than by backing, nor how it could be said of the steersman. It would properly be applied, as by Aratus, to the rowers.

2. αὐτόν.] So Ast and Ussing.—Foss and Petersen αὐτόν: the former placing only a comma at χιτωνίσκον, to which he makes αὐτόν refer. But surely the δειλός is more anxious for his life than for his clothes.

3. καὶ στρατευόμενος δὲ περὶ τοὺς ἐκβοηθούντας τε προσκαλεῖν κελύων πρὸς αὐτόν στάντας πρῶτον περιιδεῖν.] Vulg. καὶ στρατευόμενος δὲ προσκαλεῖν πάντας πρὸς αὐτόν καὶ στάντας πρῶτον περιιδεῖν. PVat., καὶ στρατευόμενος δὲ περὶ τοὺς (η superscr.) ἐκβοηθούντας τε προσκαλεῖν. κελύων πρὸς αὐτόν στάντας πρῶτον περιιδεῖν. Ussing adopts the correction περὶ for περὶ τοὺς in the PVat., and for ἐκβοηθούντος writes τοὺς ἐκβοηθούντας: in this I follow him, but not in putting πρὸς αὐτόν (ms. αὐτόν) before κελύων: it can go with στάντας as well as with προσκαλεῖν. Foss differs from Ussing only in omitting τοὺς (which, however, seems necessary) and in leaving πρὸς αὐτόν as I do, in its place. Petersen proposes merely to write ἐκβοηθούντος τοῦ περὶ τοὺς περὶ ἐκβοηθούντος τε. One objection to this is that part of τὸ περὶ is already fighting; it is to a small support-party that the Coward addresses himself. Ast takes the vulgate, simply omitting στάντας, and, as usual, despising the PVat. ms. But πάντας is plainly wrong.

4. καὶ τὸν παῖδα ἐκπέμψας.] The καὶ is inserted conjecturally by Foss and Ussing.

5. εἰπεῖν] is not in the mss., but is supplied by all the editors.

6. διηγείσθαι ὡς κινδυνεύσας ἕνα σέσωκα τῶν φίλων.] So the PVat.; Foss, Petersen, Ussing. Vulg. διηγείσθαι ὡς κινδυνεύσας, ὡς σέσωκε τῶν φίλων. Foss and Petersen take κινδυνεύσας with σέσωκα, Ussing with διηγείσθαι ὡς.

XXVIII.

1. ἔτι κρήνη†.] The PVat. has ἐπιχωρῶν: the other mss. contain nothing corresponding to it, but read simply οὗς ἀπονιψάμενος τὰς χεῖρας. Siebenkees corrected ἐπιχωρῶν to ἐπὶ κρήνην, which Schneider adopted,—saying, however, that he would prefer either ἀπὸ κρήνης or ἐπὶ κρήνην [ἐλθὼν καὶ] ἀπονιψάμενος. In the absence of any probable emendation, I give the dative: cf. Od. XIII. 408, ἐπὶ κρήνῃ, 'at a fountain.'—Petersen ingeniously proposes ἐπὶ πρῶ ἡδῇ: Foss boldly prints ἐπὶ χροῶν που [γενόμενος] ἀπονιψάμενος τὰς χεῖρας, κ.τ.λ.: 'when he has been anywhere at the offering of libations to the dead.'—I once thought of εἰ τι ἔχρωεν, 'when anything has defiled him.'

2. ἕως διέβληθ.] So Petersen, with all the mss. Most editors insert δν. But the omission of δν in such cases, though commonest in poetry, is not confined to it. Thuc. I. 137, μηδένα ἐκβῆναι ἐκ τῆς νεῦς μέχρι πλοῦς γένηται.

3. καὶ ἐὰν ἴδῃ ὅφιν ἐν τῇ οἰκίᾳ, ἐὰν μὲν παρείαν, Σαβάζιον καλεῖν, ἐὰν δὲ ἱερόν, κ.τ.λ.] The PVat. alone has the words, ἐὰν παρείαν, Σαβάζιον (sic) καλεῖν, ἐὰν δὲ ἱερόν,... With Ussing I insert μὲν before παρείαν. Foss compresses and alters the sentence thus:—καὶ ἐὰν παρείαν ἴδῃ ὅφιν ἐν τῇ οἰκίᾳ, Σαβάζιον καλεῖν, ἐὰν δ' ἐπ' ἡρίου (for ἱερόν—'on a grave').

4. ἐνταῦθα ἱερόν εὐθὺς ἰδρύσασθαι.] Vulg. ἱερόν ἐνταῦθα ἰδρύσασθαι, PVat. ἐνταῦθα ἱερῶν [sic] εὐθὺς ἰδρύσασθαι. Ussing adopts ἱερῶν in the sense of aediculae: but surely it is a vox nihili. Petersen has taken Dübner's conjecture ἡρώων: but I do not see how that mends matters. With Foss, I leave ἱερόν. It is probably corrupt; but, as being a word of general sense, it might possibly mean a small shrine or altar; and nothing better has been proposed.

5. κὰν γλαῖξ βαδίζοντος αὐτοῦ παράττηται, εἴπας, κ.τ.λ.] The PVat. (the sole authority for the sentence) has κὰν γλαῦκ βαδίζοντος αὐτοῦ παράττηται καὶ εἴπας, κ.τ.λ. Badham corrects γλαῦκ to γλαῦξ, the indic. to subj., and omits καὶ: and, with Ussing, I have followed him. Petersen does so too, except that he keeps καὶ, and inserts δειδίττηται before it, since the Munich Epitome has ὁμοίως γλαυκας δειδίττονται: but this seems very improbable. Foss, κὰν γλαυκες βαδίζοντος αὐτοῦ [ἀνακράγῳσι]. παράττεσθαι, καὶ εἴπας. Ast conjectured that παράττηται should be changed to παρίπτηται, 'fly past.'

6. λιβανωτὸν, μῦλακα.] The PVat. (which alone has this) λιβανωτῶν πίνακα: so Coray and Schneider, but with λιβανωτοῦ.—Meier, λιβανωτὸν, στύρακα (storax, for incense): Foss, λιβανωτὸν, πόπανα (cakes). Petersen's μῦλακα, which Ussing has adopted, seems best: see Notes.

7. ἀπὸ θαλάττης.] Schneider's ἀπὸ for the ἐπὶ of the PVat. has been received by Foss, Ussing and most editors. Cf. supra, περιέμβαμενος ἀπὸ ἱεροῦ.

8. κὰν ποτε ἐπὶ τῇ σκορῶδων ἐστειμένον τῶν ἐπὶ ταῖς τριόδοις, ἀπελθὼν κατὰ κεφαλῆς λούσασθαι.] The PVat. has κὰν ποτε ἐπὶ τῇ σκορῶδω [sic] ἐστεμμένον τῶν ἐπὶ ταῖς τριόδοις ἐπελθόντων (corrected into ἀπ. by the same hand) κατὰ κ. λούσασθαι. Vulg. καὶ ἐπὶ ταῖς τριόδοις ἀπελθὼν κατὰ κεφαλῆς λούσασθαι. Ast corrected σκορῶδω to σκορῶδων, and ἐπελθόντων to ἀπελθόντων. These corrections confirm each other; for, when the ν of σκορῶδων was lost, ἀπελθὼν was changed to ἀπελθόντων for the sake of τῶν, and ἀπ. to ἐπ. for the sake of τριόδοις. Ast also changed ἐστεμμένον to ἐφθμμένον, 'one who has fastened upon,' 'laid hands upon;' and in this, too, is followed by Ussing. But ἐφθμ- μένων seems improbable. Here I have ventured to adopt an emendation of my own, because it is so near at once to the ms. and to the sense required as to appear highly probable. To eat the garlic and other refuse placed for 'Hecate's supper' at the cross-roads is often mentioned as an impiety to which hunger drove the poor: see Ar. Plut. 595, Plut. de Superst. 10. For ἐστεμμένων read ἐστιώμενον, 'feasting upon.' With σκορόδων ἐστιᾶσθαι, compare Ar. Vesp. 1306, κακρύνων...ευωχημένον, and so Char. xx. (viii.), εὐωχεῖν λόγων.—Foss gives σκορόδῳ ἐστεμμένον, and keeps ἐπελθόντων, altering ταῖς τριόδοις to τὰς τριόδους. Petersen takes a strange view of the passage. He reads:—κάν ποτε ἐπὶ τῇ σκορόδῳ ἐστεμμένον τῶν ἐπὶ ταῖς τριόδοις Ἑκάτῃ θύοντων [for ἐπελθόντων] κατὰ κεφαλῆς λούσασθαι. 'If [one of] those who are sacrificing to H. at the cross-roads, crowned with garlic, cast an [evil] eye on him,' &c. The words τριόδοις ἐκάτῃ θύοντων were first corrupted, he supposes, to τριόδοις ἐκαπλῶντων, and eis then omitted (Pet. introd. p. 5).

XXIX.

1. ἰσχύος, οὐ κέρδους γλιχομένη. Vulg. ἰσχυροῦ κέρδους γλιχομένης: PVat. ἰσχυρῶς κέρδους γλιχομένη. The favourite mode of emending the passage has been by adopting Pauw's conjecture of κράτους for κέρδους: thus Foss ἰσχυροῦ κράτους: Petersen and Ussing, ἰσχυρῶς κράτους. This seems to me rash. Casaubon saw that κέρδους was genuine, but that a not was required with it; the love of power for its own sake, as felt by the oligarch, being opposed to that love of power for the sake of money with which demagogues were so often—as in Ar. Vesp. 672—reproached. He conjectured ἰσχυρὰ, κέρδους οὐ γλιχομένη. But a simpler remedy is, I think, at hand. The ἰσχυροῦ of the vulgate merely conceals ἰσχύος, οὐ. For ἰσχύς in the sense of δύναμις, cf. Thuc. ii. 97, ἔλθεν ἡ βασιλεῖα ἐπὶ μέγα ἰσχύος.

2. καὶ ὑπὸ τούτων ὑβριζομένους ἢ τιμωμένους: καὶ ὅτι ἡ τούτους δεῖ ἢ ἡμᾶς οἰκεῖν τὴν πόλιν. Vulg. καὶ ὅτι ὑπὸ τινῶν ὑβριζόμενος εἶπεν, δεῖ αὐτοὺς κάμει τὴν πόλιν οἰκεῖν: PVat. καὶ ὑπὸ τούτων ὑβριζομένους ἢ τιμωμένους [acc. to Shepp., ἢ τιμωμένους: acc. to Siebenkees ἡτιμώμενος] ὅτι ἡ τούτους δεῖ ἢ ἡμᾶς οἰκεῖν τὴν πόλιν.—I have followed Ussing. Foss and Petersen read with Schneider ὑβριζομένους [καὶ] ἡτιμωμένους. There is no difficulty about the καὶ—for, if ἡτιμωμένους had been corrupted into ἡ τιμωμένους, it would naturally have been omitted; but the perfect tense is an objection. We should have expected ὑβριζομένους ἢ ἀτιμωμένους, esp. as a series of insults is referred to. I think with Ussing that ἡ τιμωμένους, which is nearer to the ms., gives better grammar and better sense. The oligarch is indignant that it should be in the power of the people to slight or to honour him at will, and scorns their favours as much as their affronts. αὐτοὺς, which is found only in the PVat., probably came in from αὐτοὺς ἡμᾶς just before: with Ussing I omit it.

3. κατὰ μέσον δέ.] So Ussing for καὶ τὸ μέσον δέ: he also omits καὶ before τὸ ἡμίτιον.

4. σοβεῖν τοὺς τοιοῦτους λόγους †λέγων διὰ τὴν τοῦ Ωιδείου†.] Vulg. σοβεῖν τοῖς τοιοῦτοις λόγοις: διὰ τοὺς συκοφ., κ.τ.λ. PVat. σοβεῖν τοὺς τοιοῦτους λόγους τὴν τοῦ ὠδί, with an abbreviation over the ι which Badham could not decipher. Preller's τὴν τοῦ Ωιδείου is adopted by Foss and Petersen: Ussing despairs of the words, and does not print them. To govern λόγους, Ussing inserts λέγων, Foss ἀφίεις; Petersen suggests τοῖς τοι. λόγοις. How τὴν τοῦ Ωιδείου is to be governed, no one explains; for σοβεῖν certainly cannot govern it. I have inserted διὰ, which may have been lost through a confusion with the other διὰ immediately following. But I have not much faith in τὴν τοῦ Ωιδείου itself, and suspect that the fault lies too deep to be got at now.

5. τῶν δικαζόντων.] Vulg. δικαζομένων: Schneider δικαζόντων, and so Foss and Ussing.

6. καὶ ὡς ἀχάριστόν ἐστι τὸ πλῆθος καὶ αἰ τοῦ νέμοντος καὶ διδόντος.] The words τὸ πλῆθος καὶ αἰ, wanting in the mss., were supplied by Ast's almost certain conjecture, which Foss and Ussing adopt.

7. λεπτός.] So Petersen and Ussing with the mss.; but it means macer, 'meagre,' 'starved-looking': not lepuis (pauper), as Ussing renders it. Foss, with Meier, λεπρός.

8. τούτον γὰρ ἐκ δώδεκα πόλεων εἰς μίαν καταγαγόντα λῦσαι τὴν βασιλείαν.] The PVat., which alone has this, gives τούτον γὰρ ἐκ δώδεκα πόλεων καταγαγόντα λυθεῖσ βασιλῆα: with a contraction after the σ, which is written above the line. Foss thinks that the ms. had λυθείσαν βασιλείαν. Bold measures have been taken to supply the supposed lacuna. Foss reads, after εἰς μίαν, καταγαγόντα [τὰ πλῆθη ἀφείναι τὴν κατα] λυθείσαν βασιλείαν. Meier's remedy, which Foss justly calls 'portentous,' is to copy after καταγαγόντα the greater part of Thuc. II. 15. Ussing reads καταγαγόντα [τὰ πλῆθη] παῦσαι τὰς βασιλείας: but this, though it adds less to the text, uses the text itself still worse. I greatly prefer Ast's simple proposal to read λῦσαι τὴν βασιλείαν. It does not seem unlikely that the σ written over λυθεῖσ was meant simply to correct θ, and that the doubtful contraction after it was merely the article, and not, as has been supposed, αν or αι. The object of καταγαγόντα is τὴν πόλιν, understood from τῇ πόλει just before. αὐτῶν refers to the population of the δώδεκα πόλεις.

XXX.

This chapter is found only in the PVat. ms.

1. καὶ ἐπισκῶψαι δὲ, ὡς χρηστός ἐστι.] The ms. has καὶ ἐπι-σκηψαι δὲ, ὡς χρηστός ἐστι. Meier's excellent emendation ἐπισκῶψαι, has been adopted by Ussing. Coray, followed by Ast and Foss, reads ἐπισκῆψαι δέ, ὃς χρηστός ἐστὶ, which, besides being awkward grammatically, gives a very tame sense.

2. καὶ τὸν πονηρὸν δὲ εἰπεῖν ἐλεύθερον, ἂν βούληται τις εὖ σκοπεῖν.] The ms. has ἂν βούληται τις εἰς π... The lacuna has usually been filled up with πονηρὸν or πονηρίαν. Coray proposed ἂν πον λοιδορήται τις εἰς πονηρίαν, or ἂν διαβάλληται τις εἰς πονηρίαν. Foss reads, on his own conj., [καὶ] ἂν βούληται τις εἰς π[ονηρὸν ἀποτεινεσθαι] τὰ μὲν ἄλλα ὁμολογεῖν, κ.τ.λ. where εἰς π. ἀποτεινεσθαι means, I suppose, to descant upon a bad man; a very odd phrase. Hartung has probably, I think, come nearer to the truth. Out of εἰς π... he gets εὖ σκοπεῖν. Now I feel sure that the words ἂν βούληται τις, κ.τ.λ. are part of what the φιλοπόνηρος says. The rascal, he contends, is merely 'a frank independent man, if one will look fairly at the matter.'

3. ἔνια δὲ ἀγνοεῖν φῆσαι· εἶναι γὰρ αὐτόν.] The ms. has ἔνια δὲ ἀγνοεῖν φῆσαι γὰρ αὐτόν. Foss, rightly, I think, inserts εἶναι between φῆσαι and γὰρ, and puts a point at φῆσαι. Ussing adopts the conjecture, but, by an oversight, ascribes it to Petersen.

4. ἐπιδέξιον.] Before Badham collated the PVat. ms. it was supposed, on the report of Amaduzzi, that it contained ἐπίδοξον, which Ast prints. It is creditable to Schneider's sagacity that he conjectured ἐπιδέξιον, which now proves to be actually the word in the ms.

5. εὖνους δὲ εἶναι αὐτῷ ἐν ἐκκλησίᾳ λέγοντι.] The ms., τῷ ἐν ἐκκλησίᾳ λέγοντι. Meier's αὐτῷ seems nearly certain; it is adopted by Foss and Ussing.

6. καὶ πρὸς τοὺς καθήμενους δὲ εἰπεῖν δεινός.] The ms. καὶ προσκαθήμενος δέ. Here again, Meier seems to have hit the truth with πρὸς τοὺς καθήμενους, and is followed by Ussing. For οἱ καθήμενοι said of the judges in a law-court, 'the bench,' see Andoc. de Myst. § 139, ᾧ οὐδ' ἂν ὑμῶν τῶν καθημένων οὐδεὶς ἂν οὐδὲν ἐπιτρέψειεν.

INDEX TO THE NOTES. I.

A.		bath, the warm .....	XXI. 11
advocates in law-courts	XXX. 4	bathman, his duties ...	XV. 7
Aeginetan standard of measures .....	XXVI. 10	'benevolences' (ἐπιδοσεις) at Athens .....	XXV. 3
Aegospotami, battle of	XIX. 7	birds sacred to several deities .....	XXVIII. 18
Aethiopian slaves .....	VII. 4	bottomry .....	VI. 2
Alexander the Great ...	VI. 3	boundaries .....	XXIV. 8
ambassadors, pay given to .....	XXVI. 5	C.
Antheſterion, festivals in .....	XXVI. 14	Cabeiri, mysteries of ...	XXVII. 3
Antipater .....	VI. 8	cakes for sacrifice .....	XXIV. 14
Apaturia, the .....	XVIII. 5	'cask, the pierced' .....	XI. 3 arbitration .....	II. 2	Cassander .....	XX. 3
archery .....	XXVI. 4	choregus, duties of .....	XXV. 3
'architect,' name of the manager of the theatre .....	IV. 5	cisterns .....	XI. 2
archon, assessors of ...	XXIX. 3	citizenship, conditions of	XXI. 6
Artemis, festivals of ...	XXIV. 3	clansmen, dinners of ...	XXIV. 11
Asclepius, temples of ...	VII. 30	cloak, mode of wearing	XXIX. 11
Athene, invocation of	XXVIII. 19	— fashionable length of	XXIV. 15
athletics, Greek moderation in .....	XIII. 6	— the breast of, a pocket	XVI. 17
augury in Greece .....	XXVIII. 28	clothing, winter and summer .....	XII. 3
B.		club-dinners .....	XXVI. 21 baggage carried by a slave on foot .....	XXVI. 6	conjurers .....	XVI. 6 ball, games at .....	VII. 19	conspiracies in law-courts .....	XXX. 7
banks in Marketplace.	VII. 7	contractors (ἐργολάβοι) .....	XX. 3
barber's shop, a lounge	XVII. 7	convolvulus, worn by bacchants .....	XXVIII. 25 baths, the public, behaviour at .....	XIV. 12	cooks, hired .....	XVI. 11
		copper money .....	XXVI. 16
		couches, coverings for	VI. 17
		counting-board .....	IV. 10, XIII. 2

'crepis,' a slipper .....	I. 7
crier, public .....	XVI. 10
cross-roads, stones at ...	XXVIII. 13
— offerings to Hecate at	XXVIII. 33
cups inlaid with gems .....	VI. 6
cushions taken to the theatre .....	I. 10
Cyzicus .....	VII. 11

D.

Danaids, allusion to ...	XI. 3
dancing .....	IX. 7
dead body, pollution from touching a .....	XXVIII. 21 dead, laying out of the decked vessels .....	XIII. 3
Delphi .....	XXV. 10
deme, enrolment in a ...	VII. 3
demesmen, dinners of ...	XXI. 6
Diasia, the .....	XXIV. 11
dicasteries, tone of the dice of deerhorn .....	XXVI. 14
dicasteries, tone of the dice of deerhorn .....	XXIX. 15
dice-playing .....	VII. 14
dinner-party, presents to guests at .....	XVI. 12
Dionysia, the .....	XV. 3
discount on copper money .....	XVIII. 2
distraint, right of ...	XXVI. 16
dogs, Greek feeling towards .....	XXIV. 9
— in the halls of Greek houses .....	XXX. 6
— Laconian .....	XIV. 7
— of Melita .....	VII. 10
doves, Sicilian .....	VII. 27
dreams, belief in .....	VII. 13
— interpretation of .....	XXVIII. 26
drill-serjeants .....	XXVIII. 28
dropping a cup, etc. a bad omen .....	VII. 22
duty on exports ...	XVII. 10
	VI. 10

E.

Ecclesia, controlling power of .....	XXIX. 5
education, Greek ideal of .....	VIII. 19
elective offices .....	XXIX. 9
ephebeum in gymnasia .....	VII. 8
Eumolpidae .....	XXVIII. 15
expounders of sacred law .....	ib. 15

F.

festivals, presents sent to friends at .....	III. 2
fish-market, the .....	XVII. 6
fish, salted .....	XIV. 9
flute-playing .....	XX. 2
fourth day of month, sacred to Hermes .....	XXVIII. 3
frankincense .....	XXVIII. 24
fruit, wayfarers allowed to eat .....	XXIV. 7
fuller, the .....	XXV. 13
'full market,' time meant by .....	XVII. 3

G.

gambling-houses .....	XVI. 12
Gate, the Sacred, at Athens .....	XIII. 9
genealogy, Greek love for .....	XXI. 2
Generals, the Ten .....	VII. 9
guests, presents to ( ξένια ) .....	XXVI. 7
gymnasia .....	VII. 8
gynaeconomi .....	XXV. 16

H.

hair, close-cut, a mark of mourning .....	XXIV. 16
— worn long by youths .....	VII. 3
Hecate's agency invoked by spells .....	XXVIII. 17

'Hecate's supper' .....	XXVIII. 33	leathern garments .....	XIV. 10
Heracles, temples of ...	VIII. 6	libations at dinner to herald's office .....	XVI. 10	deities .....	XXIV. 3
Hermes, festivals of, at		'like to like' .....	XXX. 10
palaestras .....	XXV. 10	'liturgies,' the Athenian	XXIX. 16
— the giver of luck ...	XXVI. 9	loans between neighheroes, festivals of the	VIII. 4	bours .....	XIV. 8
hired labour .....	XIV. 4	lustration, circular .....	XXVIII. 33
Homer, his place in		Lysicrates, monument of	XXV. 3
Greek education .....	XXIX. 8
hoops, children's .....	XIII. 7 horses, kept by rich men for the credit of the State .....	VI. 16
houses purified .....	XXVIII. 16

I.

ill-omened words...XIII. 10, XVII. 9 informers, public...VI. 11, XXIX. 14 initiation, Dionysiacrites of .....	VIII. 11
innkeeping .....	XVI. 8 interest on money by the day .....	XVI. 19
— — — by the month	XXIV. 2
— compound .....	XXIV. 10

J.

javelin-throwing .....	VIII. 15 jury-courts, democratic tone of the .....	XXIX. 15

K.

knights, processions of the Athenian .....	VIII. 25

L.

labourers, hired .....	XIV. 4 laurel, a bit of, carried in the mouth as a charm .....	XXVIII. 4

M.

mantic art, the .....	XXVIII. 28 marketing, usu. done by slaves .....	XVII. 6
marriage feast .....	XXV. 5
mask, the comic actor's	XVI. 5
Megalopolis, battle of	XIX. 6
Melita .....	VII. 27
mercenary troops .....	XXI. 4
Metroum, the .....	VII. 34
mice, omens from .....	XXVIII. 14
moneylenders .....	VI. 3
mourning in the house of death .....	XIII. 3 Muses, festival of, at schools .....	XXV. 11 musical skill, Greek feeling for .....	VIII. 13
musicians, professional	VII. 23 myrtle-berries, at dessert .....	XVII. 4 myrtle-wreaths worn by sacrificers .....	XXVIII. 24 mysteries of Eleusis, the greater .....	XVIII. 3
— the lesser ...	XXVII. 3
— the orphic .....	XVIII. 29
— of Samothrace ...	XXVII. 3

N.

name, change of .....	XXI. 3
navigable season, the...	XVIII. 2

'new-moon,' the fair-day at Athens ..... XIV. 11

O.

oath of inability to accept public office..... IV. 6 Odeum, the..... XVIII. 4 officers, public, appointed by lot or by election IV. 6 oil used at the baths ... XII. 2 omens which cross the path ..... XXVIII. 5
 — the evil threatened by, transferable ..... XXVIII. 6 Orphic societies, the ... XXVIII. 20 owl, omen given by ... XXVIII. 18 ox, the more costly victim for sacrifice ..... VIII. 7

P.

palaestra and gymnasium ..... XIX. 4 palaestra, private ..... VII. 18 Panathenaea, the Great XXIX. 4 parasites ..... XI. 4 parents, neglect to maintain, punishable ..... XVI. 13 perfumer's shop, the, a lounge ..... XVII. 7
 'Pheidonian measures' XXVI. 11 philosophers, their conversazioni ..... VII. 20 places of honour at table ..... VII. 2 plate lent between friends ..... XXIII. 8 Polysperchon ..... XX. 4 porches of Athens ..... I. 2
 'Poseidon's day' ..... XXI. 12
 possets ..... XIV. 2
 'potter spites potter'... XXX. 10

presents made to guests at dinner ..... XXVI. 7 — sent to friends at the festivals ..... III. 2 privacy, little permitted by Greek manners ... IV. 9 procession, the Panathenaic ..... XXIX. 4 public services, the, at Athens ..... XXIX. 16 puppies used in a rite of purification ..... XXVIII. 36 purse usu. carried by an attendant ..... XXIII. 3 Pydna, siege of ..... XX. 4

R.

recitations ..... III. 6
 'red' snake, the ..... XXVIII. 9 rings worn as amulets VII. 29
 'right wheel,' etc. .... VIII. 3

S.

Sabazius ..... XXVIII. 10
 'sacred' snake, the ... XXVIII. 11 sacrifice, dress worn at VII. 36
 — followed by a banquet XV. 2
 — public, by the Senate VII. 32
 — — form in reporting VII. 35 sacrificial victim, its neck bent back ..... VIII. 7 — parts of, reserved for priest ..... XXV. 6 Samothrace, mysteries of ..... XXVII. 3
 'satyri,' a species of ape VII. 12 schools, law for privacy of ..... XIX. 3 schoolmasters' fees ..... XXVI. 13 sea-water in purification XXVIII. 32 seals set on doors ..... XXIII. 4 seers (μῦθρες) ..... XXVIII. 28

serpent seen in a house, ominous .....	XXVIII. 8	T.
serenades .....	IX. 2	tapestry hung on walls	VII. 17
seventh day of month sacred to Apollo ...	XXVIII. 23	taverns in the market- place .....	XVI. 20
'shares in the luck!' ...	XXVI. 9	tax-farmers .....	XVI. 9
ships, large, completely decked .....	XXV. 9	'tenth-day' festival ...	VIII. 12
shoes .....	I. 7	theatre, cost of places at	XV. 5
siesta, at noon .....	XXIV. 17	— tickets for .....	XVI. 7 singing at dessert .....	III. 5	— seats of officials at ...	VII. 9 slaves, Greek and Ro- man treatment of ...	XXVI. 15	— lessees of .....	XXVI. 4
— Greek familiarity with	XIV. 3	— demonstrative audi- ences in .....	XVII. 2
— skilled, rent paid by, to their masters .....	ib. ib.	theft, laws against .....	XVI. 14
— rations of .....	XXIV. 6	Theseus, the hero of the commonwealth ...	XXIX. 17
— attend their masters in the streets .....	XXIII. 10	— his connection with Heracles .....	VIII. 6
— let out for hire .....	XXVI. 20	Thracian peltasts, etc...	XXI. 4
Solonian standard of weights and mea- sures .....	XXVI. 10	— slaves .....	XXI. 7 son, rejoicings for birth of .....	XXII. 4	Thrasylus, monument of .....	XXV. 3 soothsayer, consulted in the smallest matters	XVII. 8	'tityr,' followers of Dionysus .....	VII. 12
'sophist' meaning spe- cially 'rhetorician' ...	VII. 21	tombstones, various forms of .....	XXVIII. 20
Sosias, a Thracian name	XXI. 3	torch-race .....	VIII. 5
Sosistratus .....	XXI. 5	torches at the Mysteries	XVIII. 3 speech-writers .....	XXII. 6	travel, foreign, Plato upon .....	VI. 7 spells, malign .....	XXVIII. 17	trial, day appointed for by archon .....	III. 3
sprinkling, ceremony of	XXVIII. 3	tribesmen, festivals of	XXIV. 11 stick, custom of carry- ing a .....	VII. 16	'tribon,' a coarse cloak	XXV. 21 stones, three, virtue of	XXVIII. 7	trierarchy, the .....	XXV. 9 streets, demeanour in the .....	IV. 8	tripod, the prize of a choregus .....	XXV. 3
subscriptions for friends	V. 5	trumpet, signals by .....	XXVII. 8
— to the public treasury	XXV. 4	U.
sureties .....	IX. 3	unguent instead of olive- oil, a luxury .....	VII. 6 swallow, a proverb of loquacity .....	XIX. 8
sword, long ( σπάθη ) ...	XXVII. 7

V.

vases, Thurian .....	VII. 15
verdict, unanimous.....	XXII. 5
vessels of water at temple-doors .....	XXVIII. 3 vestibule of a Greek house .....	VII. 24
votive chapels, etc., at Athens .....	XXVIII. 12
voyage, danger of wicked companions in a .....	XXVII. 3

W.

walk after dinner .....	IV. 3
'watch-dog of the people' .....	XXX. 6
weasel, ill-omened .....	XXVIII. 5 wedding ceremonies ...	XXV. 5

wedding feast .....	IX. 4
— presents .....	XXVI. 22
wine, mixing of .....	XIV. 6
— selling, frauds in ...	XXVI. 3
witnesses called to a payment .....	XIII. 4
witness, oath of inability to be a .....	XVI. 16
witchcraft .....	XXVIII. 17
women, privacy enjoined upon .....	XXI. 9
— restrictions upon freedom of .....	XXV. 17
— attended by slaves abroad .....	XXV. 16
— admitted to the Orphic and other mysteries .....	XXVIII. 30
'women's market,' the .....	I. 8
workshops, the, resorts for conversation .....	XVII. 7

INDEX TO THE NOTES. II.

α.		ἐρανος .....	V. 5
ἀναβεβλημένος .....	XXIX. 11	ἐφόδιον .....	XXVI. 4
ἀνακαλυπτήρια .....	XXVI. 22	η.
ἀνακόπτειν (a var. lect.)		ἡμιολiai .....	XXVII. 2
Crit. App. .....	XXVII. 1	ἡττᾶσθαι, of law-suits...	V. 2
ἀποφορά .....	XXVI. 15	θ.
ἀτέλεια .....	VI. 10	θεατρῶναι .....	XXVI. 4
αὐτοκράτωρ .....	XIX. 5	θεός=οὐρανός .....	XXVII. 4
αὐτός 'his honour' .....	I. 6	θεός ὕει, κ.τ.λ. ....	ιδ. ιδ.
β.		ι.
βλασφημία .....	XVII. 9	ιερώσυνα .....	XXV. 7
δ.		κ.
δαίπνον ἀπὸ σπυρίδος and		κουρὰ μέση .....	XXIX. 12
ἀπὸ συμβολῶν .....	XXVI. 21	κροκύδας ἀφαιρεῖν .....	I. 3
δεισιδαιμονία .....	XXVIII. 1	λ.
δοικισμός .....	XXIX. 17	λογίζομαι= imputo .....	XXIV. 4
ε.		λογογράφοι .....	XXII. 6
ἐκπλύνειν, said of the		λοιδορηθῆναι, deponent	XVI. 2
fuller .....	XXV. 13	μ.
ἐμπολῶν, meanings of...	XVI. 22	μανικός, Greek notion ἐξόμνησθαι ἀρχάς .....	IV. 6	of .....	XXI. 13 ἐξόμνησθαι, said of a witness .....	XVI. 16
ἐπὶ δεξιᾷ ἀναβάλλεσθαι	XXIX. 11
ἐπιδόσεις .....	XXV. 4
ἐπικαταλλαγή .....	XXVI. 16

μειλίχιος, a name of Zeus .....	XXVI. 14	περικαθαίρειν .....	XXVIII. 36
μερίς, special sense of .....	XXVI. 2	περιβρατήριον .....	XXVIII. 3
		περισκυλακισμός .....	XXVIII. 36
		πολεμικόν, τό .....	XXVII. 8
ο.		πονηρός, peculiar notion of .....	XXX. 1
οικόσιτος .....	XXV. 8	προτέλεια γάμων .....	XXV. 5
ὄψον .....	XXI. 10
		σ.
π.		σύμβολοι .....	XXVIII. 3
πανήγυρις, meaning of .....	XVI. 15	σύμβουλοι .....	XXIX. 3
πάρεδροι .....	XXIX. 3	συνουσία .....	XXIX. 17

THE NEW YORK PUBLIC LIBRARY
REFERENCE DEPARTMENT

This book is under no circumstances to be taken from the Building

MAR 25 1917

1-7-12

MAY 13 1925

